Relocation Analysis

Sample family report for three people

Marina, Sergey, and their son Artem are considering a move from Ukraine to another part of Europe.

A family relocation is more complex than choosing a good location for one person. A place that strongly supports one family member may be neutral - or less supportive - for another.

So the first step was to compare the individual relocation patterns of all three family members across Europe. Two regions stood out where the supportive factors for all three aligned most clearly: Southern Bavaria / Tyrol and eastern Bulgaria.

Those two directions were then examined in greater depth - first for Marina, Sergey, and Artem individually, and then for the family as a whole.

Starting Point

Around Kyiv, Marina and Artem already have relatively strong supportive lines.

Marina

A strong solar theme is present here: vitality, independence, a sense of having a place of her own, and greater ease in expressing herself.

Sergey

His starting configuration is more complex and is more strongly connected with home, roots, and internal restructuring.

Artem

A strong Mercury theme supports learning, language, social connection, adaptation, curiosity, and the ability to engage quickly with a changing environment.

So the task was not to find a place that was merely "fine." A new region needed either to offer a stronger overall family configuration or to create a genuinely different and useful dynamic.

Southern Bavaria and Tyrol

One of the two most aligned family directions was the Alpine corridor of southern Bavaria and Tyrol, roughly around Garmisch-Partenkirchen, Mittenwald, and Innsbruck. Here the family pattern comes together in a particularly interesting way.

Marina

In this region, Marina is strongly supported by Mercury-ASC. This favors adaptation after a move: language, new contacts, learning, mobility, work involving information, and the ability to orient herself quickly in a new environment.

For relocation, this is a highly functional configuration because it supports not only living in a new place, but actively entering and participating in it.

Sergey

Sergey's stronger Jupiter-MC line lies farther west, but southern Germany and Tyrol still fall within its broader working range.

For him, this area is associated primarily with outward development, professional movement, and greater engagement with the external world. This is especially meaningful in contrast with his starting configuration, where themes of home, roots, and inner restructuring are more pronounced.

Artem

For Artem, Jupiter-ASC runs very close to this region, with Sun-ASC also nearby. This is one of the strongest parts of the family configuration.

Jupiter can support confidence, opportunity, learning, and openness to the world. The Sun adds independence and can help a child find his place, express himself more naturally, and gradually form a stronger sense of identity.

For the family as a whole

The Alpine region changes the overall character of the family configuration. There is less emphasis on heavier inward and home-centered themes, and more Mercury, Jupiter, and Sun: movement, learning, opportunity, expansion, and outward expression.

For that reason, this option looks less like simply moving to another country and more like a genuinely new chapter for the family.

Bulgaria

The second direction where the three family patterns could be aligned was Bulgaria. The picture here is more complex and uneven: different parts of the country work differently for each family member, so the specific region matters considerably.

Marina

For Marina, eastern Bulgaria, closer to the Black Sea, is the more supportive direction. Her solar theme becomes stronger here: greater vitality, independence, the ability to rebuild a sense of identity, and a stronger feeling of being present and visible in a new environment.

For her, Varna and Burgas therefore look considerably more interesting than western Bulgaria.

Sergey

Bulgaria requires the most caution for Sergey. His Pluto-IC line passes close to the western part of the country. For someone relocating with a family and creating a new home, this can bring deep restructuring around home, family, roots, and control.

This is not automatically a negative configuration, but it can be intense: more internal pressure, a need to change old structures, and a stronger process of rebuilding one's sense of home. For that reason, western Bulgaria looks less preferable for this family. The farther east they go, the softer the family picture becomes.

Artem

For Artem, western and central Bulgaria are stronger because Mercury-ASC runs closer there. This supports language, learning, new contacts, and adaptation to the surrounding environment.

Toward the coast, this influence becomes weaker, although it remains within a broader working range.

Varna and Burgas

Of the Bulgarian cities considered, Varna appears to offer the best overall balance.

For Marina, it is closer to her supportive solar line. For Sergey, it moves farther away from the most intense Pluto-IC influence. For Artem, the Mercury influence is weaker than in western Bulgaria, but still remains within a broader usable range.

Burgas gives a similar picture, but Varna appears slightly more balanced for the family as a whole.

Comparing the Two Directions

Varna and the Alpine region offer the family two different scenarios.

Varna looks like the gentler transition. It preserves some familiar family themes while reducing some of the more difficult influences. It may offer a calmer and relatively comfortable move.

Southern Bavaria / Tyrol creates a more pronounced shift in the family configuration. There is more outward movement: adaptation, learning, growth, opportunity, and greater expression for each family member.

If the goal is not only to find a comfortable place but to open a new stage of life for the family, the Alpine region appears stronger.

Conclusion

Of the options considered, Southern Bavaria / Tyrol appears to be the strongest direction for further exploration.

For Marina, the region supports adaptation and active engagement with a new environment. For Sergey, it shifts emphasis away from heavier internal and home-centered themes and toward outward development and opportunity. For Artem, it is especially supportive for growth, learning, confidence, and the development of independence.

Varna remains a strong alternative, particularly if the family prefers a gentler transition and the Black Sea region is important to them.

Varna - A gentler continuation
Southern Bavaria / Tyrol - A more distinct new chapter

Technical Basis

Marina	Mercury-ASC / Sun-ASC
Sergey	Jupiter-MC / Pluto-IC
Artem	Jupiter-ASC / Sun-ASC / Mercury-ASC

The working range of each line was considered in relation to its distance from exact line placement. Technical calculations are condensed so the emphasis remains on practical interpretation and decision-making.
