In Scripture Today

Matthew 25:14-30
The English word "talent" meaning a person's natural ability arose in the fifteenth century as preachers allegorized this parable, applying the Roman coins to individual capabilities. A common use of this parable is to stress what Lutherans call "law": we are obligated to use our talents to the best of our ability, or the punishment of hell awaits us. The parable also proclaims what Lutherans call "gospel": all good comes from God, who provides us far more than we need, God's grace given in abundance for our use.

Zephaniah 1:7, 12-18
Because Matthew's gospel uses money as a symbol for one's life, the passage from Zephaniah was chosen for its condemnation of misuse of money. Trusting in wealth, which is a particularly American temptation, is shown to be the dead end that it is.

1 Thessalonians 5:1-11
On this Sunday, it is especially in this second reading that God's good news is proclaimed. It is God's will to save and to keep us in light, so that we may live with Christ. The Christian community shares with one another this encouraging word. Early Christians spoke of baptism as the light within and by which we live; thus we need not fear a life walking "like the blind" (Zeph.1:17).
