What is prediagnostic testing?

Prediagnostic testing is an early assessment process that looks at developmental, behavioural or psychosocial patterns before a formal diagnosis has been confirmed.

Rather than waiting for a lengthy diagnostic process to finish before any support begins, it gives you and your support team (schools, carers and allied health professionals) a clearer picture of strengths and needs, early on. Prediagnostic testing is the first step in all of our assessments.

Why it's worth considering

Support can start sooner

Strategies and accommodations can be put in place based on what the assessment identifies, rather than waiting for a formal diagnosis.

It reduces guesswork

Everyone supporting your child, from teachers to therapists, gets clear, evidence-informed guidance rather than relying on observation alone.

It builds a stronger evidence base

The information gathered can support a later formal diagnosis, which can help with funding or access applications, including the NDIS.

It's a flexible first step

It doesn't lock you into a particular outcome. It gives you a clearer starting point, with no obligation to complete further testing.
