

AMBER — National Farmworkers Jobs Program

Amber faced an unexpected barrier that threatened her ability to remain employed when her vehicle required urgent repairs. Reliable transportation was essential for commuting to work, and without a functioning vehicle, she risked missing shifts and losing her job. This situation created added financial stress and jeopardized her overall stability in the workforce.

Through supportive services, National Farmworkers Jobs Program participant Amber received assistance to address her vehicle repair needs and restore dependable transportation. With this barrier removed, she was able to commute to work consistently, maintain her employment, and regain a sense of stability. The timely support not only helped prevent job loss but also allowed Amber to focus on her long-term employment goals and continued progress toward self-sufficiency.

By addressing this critical transportation need, Michigan Works! West Central helped Amber remain connected to work and move forward with confidence, demonstrating how targeted support services play a vital role in job retention and workforce stability.
