HIGHSCHOOL STUDENTS UPSET BY SCHEDULE CHANGES

With the start of the new semester came a couple of changes concerning the high schooler's schedules. The master schedule was altered, meaning all of the classes are now occurring at different periods than they were previously, likely to make room for new classes. Also, the "Genius Hour" we previously had at the end of the day has been replaced with an advisory period directly after lunch. And, of course, we have transitioned to having all eight classes per day as opposed to the previous block schedule with four classes per day.

Due to the changes, many students had to be removed from classes they were previously enrolled in, and put in classes they hadn't been in before. Many students feel the transition has been difficult.

One example is that the school's student council (which used to operate during Genius Hour) was left without a good window of time to meet. Student council members have expressed frustration that they now have to meet up during their lunch time. Another common complaint is that lunch has been shortened, and some students have had trouble finishing their meals. Concerning the changes in class length, according to a survey held by the newspaper, the most commonly held sentiments among students are that it is easier to absorb class material and complete work in longer classes. See page 2 for more survey results.

Overall, most students seem to have preferred the schedule from the previous semester.

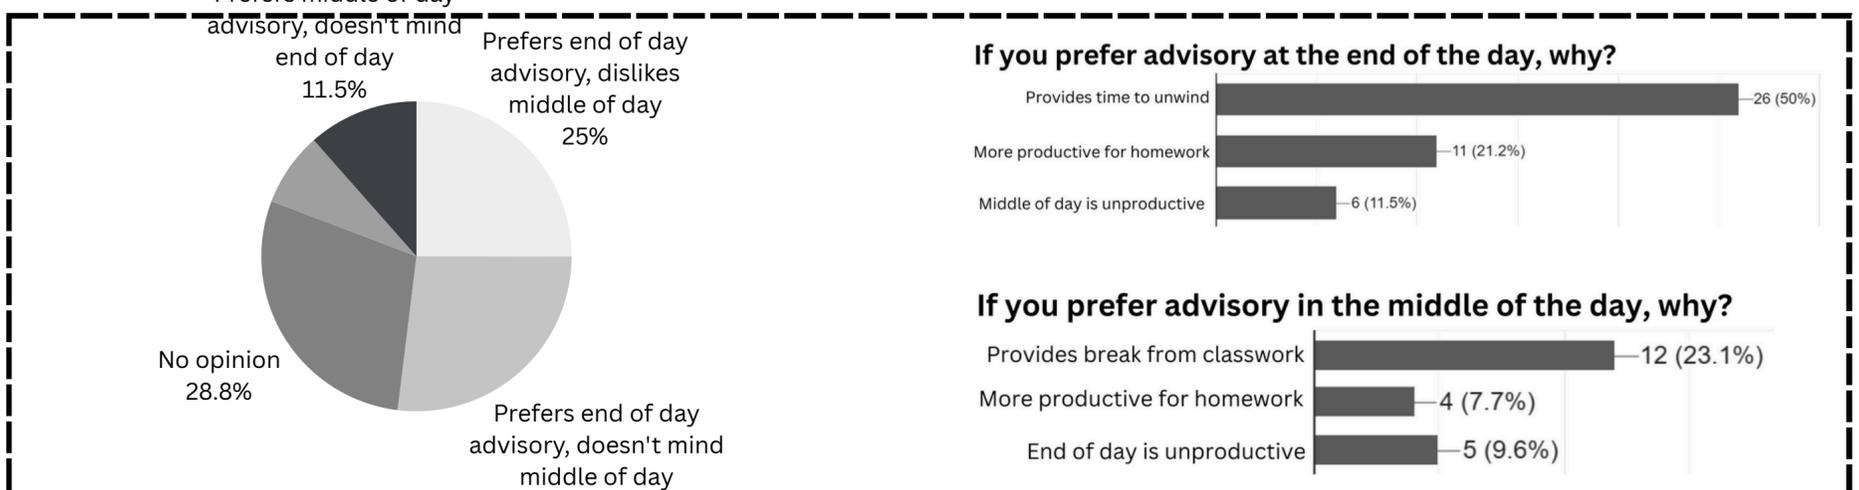

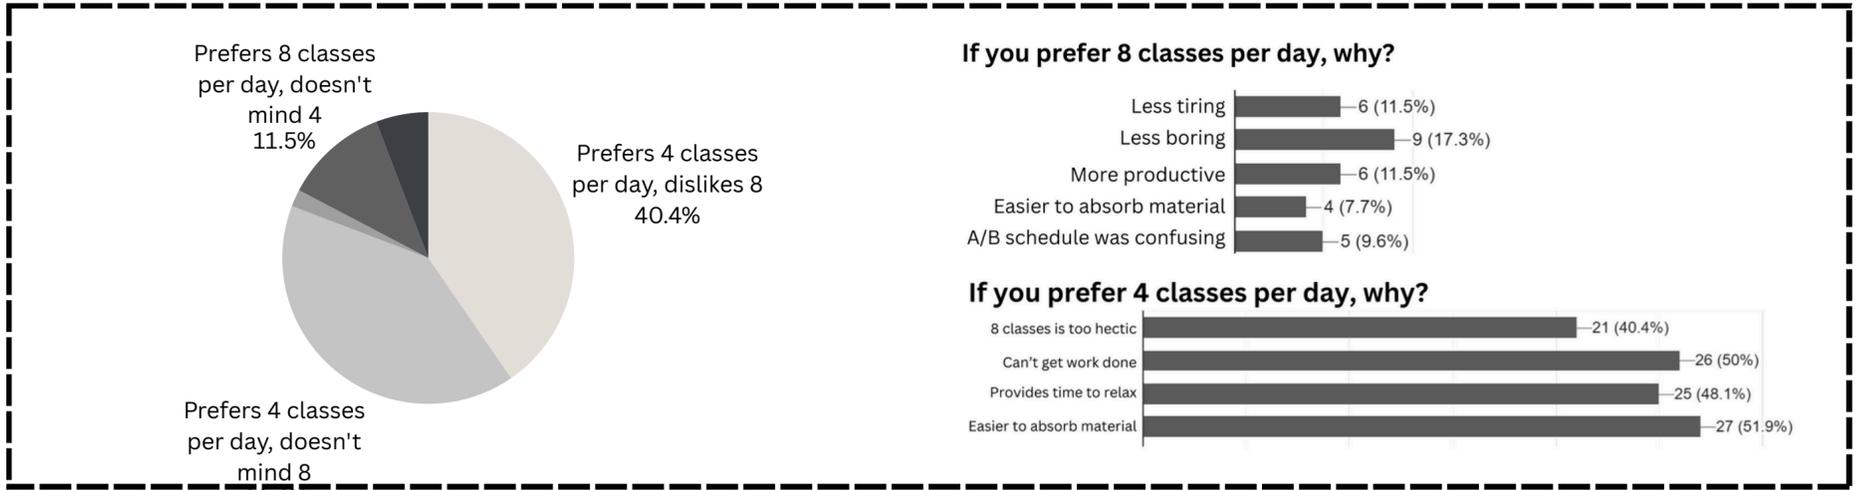

A DESTINED RECONNECTION AND A BETRAYAL???

The KAPS Community has been stricken by grief at the unfortunate news that our beloved staff member and most knowledgeable teacher Mr. Evans has died. Unfortunately we don't understand the circumstances in which he passed. The limited information we have is that Mr. Evans and Mr. Graham traveled back to their childhood home; Cash for Cars in Austin Texas, an auto wrecker joint. Mr. Graham and Mr. Evans had grown up together at the auto wrecker as orphans, being the only family each other had. The reason for which they decided to do that is still unknown. After arriving they ended up having an argument about how Mr. Graham had lied about just how much he loved KFC. This turned violent fast. Feeling utterly betrayed, Mr. Evans threw an epic punch but Mr. Graham fazed out of reality to dodge. After he fazed back in he bonked Mr. Evans on the head with a comically large hammer. Mr. Evans seeing no way out, we presume he thought he might gain the mystical powers of magnets if he consumed the magnetic scrap separator. Mr. Evans started tearing into the giant magnet taking huge bites over and over until there was no more magnet left to ingest. His hypothesis to gain powers seemed to be correct! He began throwing magnetic object after magnetic object, until he had been victorious. Unfortunately his victory did not last long as the effects of eating tons of magnetic material had started to take over. "Oops" -Mr. Evans Fin.

Mr Graham Wins

A survey was held concerning the schedule changes. In total, 52 students were surveyed. Here are the results.

THE ONLY POEM EVER

Being mad at life for the same reasons you love it must be such an integral part of the human experience.

Is it really that important if the thing you love doesn't bring both negative and positive experiences? Screaming leaves your throat hoarse, but last night you were cheering in a crowd.

All your joints ache, but yesterday you were laughing as you tried out skating.
Your fingers are tender with calluses forming, but moments earlier you were playing your favorite song on the guitar.

It's never tainted because of pain, everything in life has sharpness ingrained in it no matter what.
The joy made it loved, and the pain just made it real.

-Nobody (Odysseus)

MISSING LOST AND FOUND WAS LOST

AND THEN FOUND!

Have you heard? There's a new lost and found! That's right, lost and found 2.0!

If you find random clothes around the commons that have been there forever, or have your own that don't fit anymore, throw them on into the basket! (Please make sure that they're clean)

If you find yourself in need of new clothes, or in an emergency, you are welcome to the clothes in the basket!

Additionally, if you lose any type of item, be it a water thermos, or even something like a pair of headphones, it should be next to the basket. Same goes for finders, if something sits in the commons forever, put it by the basket!
