

The Gate Inn, Tansley

Pub & Restaurant

The Gate Inn was paying £123,077 a year on out-of-contract energy rates until we stepped in.

The Gate Inn is a well-known pub and restaurant right in the heart of Tansley. It is exactly the kind of place that brings a community together, and with that comes high energy demands to keep the doors open and the kitchen running.

The Challenge

Out of contract and overpaying on both gas and electricity

With a busy pub and restaurant to run, energy is one of the biggest overheads the business faces. The Gate Inn had fallen out of contract on both gas and electricity, meaning they were sitting on expensive default rates with no fixed deal in place.

Their gas bill was £21,068 a year, and their electricity was costing £102,009 a year. For a site using that much energy, being out of contract was one of the costliest positions they could be in.

Our Approach

Driving down unit rates and giving full visibility of energy use

With such high consumption across the site, the biggest impact would come from driving the unit rates down. On gas, we secured the cheapest unit rate available. On electricity, we negotiated competitive day and night rates so that even during peak hours, they would be getting the best price. We also switched their meter operator, the company responsible for installing and maintaining the electricity meter, to our partnered provider, saving around £300.

The Results

An immediate difference to energy costs

The new contracts have made an immediate difference. The Gate Inn is now in a completely different position.
