

THE LEGEND OF THE BRIAR ROSE

As boom-town Breckenridge approached the year 1900, the Briar Rose Mine was turning out generous deposits of silver. The Briar Rose miners began their day as the first light of the sun touched the Ten Mile Range. By nightfall, these men would return to town tired, dirty, and famished. To satisfy their needs, they would head for the shelter of their boarding house on Lincoln Street. In this rough, wooden building they would enjoy a hearty meal, a shot or two of whiskey, or perhaps a hand of poker. Then, upstairs to their rooms for a night's sleep.

As the mine prospered, and the Briar Rose miners raved about their fine meals, many outsiders began to frequent the boarding house. Business was booming, and the small house expanded. For years, people came from neighboring towns to enjoy good food and drink in this warm, inviting atmosphere.

But the mining era faded away, and the men of the Briar Rose moved on as the silver diminished. The boarding house was abandoned. In later years, it burned to the ground. In the early 1960's, another boom began. A new structure was built on Lincoln Street in the style of the boarding house, named after the old silver mine and dedicated to the spirit of fine dining and drinking.

Today, the Briar Rose Mine may still be seen atop Peak Ten. And comforting meals may still be enjoyed at its namesake.

So, Welcome to the Briar Rose!
