

WEEKEND READINGS

Sixteenth Sunday in Ordinary Time
Decimosexto Domingo del Tiempo Ordinario

This Sunday’s Gospel reminds us that the story of Mary and Martha is not about choosing between service and prayer, but about honoring both. Jesus doesn’t criticize Martha’s work—He simply invites her, and us, to avoid letting worry distract us from being truly present with Him. Biblical scholars point out that both sisters are shown as disciples: Mary learning at Jesus’ feet, and Martha serving with diakonia, the word used for ministry. These are not competing roles, but complementary expressions of faith. Just as Abraham’s hospitality in the First Reading becomes a moment of divine encounter, our own service can be sacred when rooted in love and openness. Together, Mary and Martha show us that discipleship and hospitality are for all of us, and both lead us closer to Christ

El Evangelio de este domingo nos recuerda que la historia de Marta y María no se trata de elegir entre el servicio y la oración, sino de valorar ambos. Jesús no critica el trabajo de Marta; más bien, la invita —y a nosotros también— a no dejarnos consumir por las preocupaciones que nos distraen de Su presencia. Los estudios bíblicos señalan que ambas hermanas son presentadas como discípulas: María a los pies de Jesús, aprendiendo, y Marta sirviendo con diakonia, una palabra que también significa ministerio. No son roles en competencia, sino expresiones complementarias de la fe. Así como la hospitalidad de Abraham en la Primera Lectura se convierte en un encuentro con Dios, nuestro servicio también puede ser sagrado cuando nace del amor y la apertura del corazón. Juntas, Marta y María nos muestran que el discipulado y la hospitalidad son para todos, y ambos nos acercan más a Cristo.
