Abundance Rising Farm to Table Event

Dear Community Leader,

We are writing to you as the founders of Feed'em Freedom Foundation and Black Oregon Land Trust, organizations deeply committed to transforming food systems and empowering communities through sustainable agriculture and land access. Together, we are hosting our inaugural Farm to Table event that embodies our shared vision of food justice, land sovereignty, and community empowerment. Feed'em Freedom Foundation addresses food injustice in BIPOC communities through programs like the Women in Natural Growth Initiatives (WINGI), Community Workshops, greenhouse management training, and the development of the Black Community Food Hub. Black Oregon Land Trust creates opportunities for Black farmers and land stewards to collectively access land, centering mothers and youth in programs anchored by land access and preservation, farming and food justice, and cultural sovereignty. Our collaboration represents a powerful partnership between organizations that understand land is the foundation for relationship, freedom, and well-being in Black communities.

This inaugural Farm to Table event will showcase the power of community-led agriculture while celebrating the rich traditions of ancestral foods and sustainable growing practices that connect Black communities to land and cultural heritage. Featuring locally sourced ingredients from Black farmers and growers, including those supported through Black Oregon Land Trust's land access initiatives, the event will offer interactive demonstrations, educational workshops, and meaningful conversations with community leaders that highlight how supporting local food systems creates positive change throughout our communities. Your sponsorship will directly advance the development of the Black Community Food Hub, support Black Oregon Land Trust's work in eliminating systemic barriers to land access, provide platforms for BIPOC farmers and food entrepreneurs to connect with new markets, and empower attendees with practical knowledge about sustainable agriculture and food sovereignty practices they can implement in their own communities.

By partnering with us as a sponsor, you become part of a movement toward food sovereignty, environmental justice, and community empowerment that addresses systemic inequities in food access while nurturing self-sufficiency and resilience in BIPOC communities. Your support will be recognized throughout our extensive marketing campaign, reaching thousands of community members through our website, social media channels, newsletter, and event materials, while demonstrating your organization's commitment to values that drive positive change in our region. We welcome the opportunity to discuss how this partnership can align with your community engagement goals and contribute to transformative work that extends far beyond a single evening, creating lasting impact in the communities we serve.

In solidarity and gratitude,

Shantae Johnson & Qiddist Ashe
