

THE MULTIFACETED EXECUTIVE

David Walsh: Never Let Anyone Silence Your Voice

David Walsh knows the power of a voice—because he nearly lost his. As the founder of True Tell and a professional voice actor, David has spent his career helping executives, teams, and brands find their authentic voice. His mission became personal when a medical crisis robbed him of his own ability to speak, forcing him to rebuild not only his vocal strength but also his confidence.

On The Multifaceted Executive podcast, in his episode Never Let Anyone Silence Your Voice, David shared the deeply human story behind his work and why he believes every leader's greatest asset is their ability to communicate with clarity and conviction.

“Your voice is more than sound—it’s your presence, your truth, your power. Losing mine taught me how easily we can give it away, and how vital it is to protect it.”

From Broadcast Booths to Boardrooms

Before founding True Tell, David built a successful career as a voice actor, lending his voice to commercials, narration, and corporate media. Through True Tell, David blends his media expertise with leadership coaching, helping clients align their messaging with their values so they can lead with authenticity.

The Day the Voice Went Silent

David’s turning point came when a medical issue left him unable to speak. For someone whose livelihood—and identity—was tied to his voice, it was a devastating blow. Instead of retreating, David approached the challenge with patience and persistence.

“Losing my voice taught me that presence isn’t about volume—it’s about intention. People can hear you when you’re speaking from a place of truth.”

Coaching Leaders to Speak with Impact

Today, through True Tell, David helps leaders at every stage, whether they’re delivering a keynote, pitching to investors, or managing teams, to speak in ways that inspire action. His coaching focuses on vocal strength, messaging clarity, and emotional connection, with a special emphasis on helping underrepresented voices rise in spaces where they’ve historically been overlooked.

He challenges clients to strip away jargon, speak with precision, and match their delivery to their message. The goal: not just to talk, but to transform the way people listen.

Never Giving Away Your Voice

David’s advice to leaders is simple but non-negotiable: never let anyone silence you—intentionally or by neglecting your own development. A strong voice is not about being the loudest in the room; it’s about being the clearest, the most intentional, and the most authentic.

“If you know what you stand for, and you’re willing to speak it, your voice becomes unstoppable.”
