MISSIONS

We recently made a quick trip back to our partner village in Papua before preparing to return to the States for a few months of furlough. Our days were packed with training our translation team, collecting Murkim stories for language analysis, and sharing God's Word.

But it's the personal connections that remind us why we are here. Not long ago, Sarah was sitting on the bark floor of a jungle hut, working on a traditional Papuan net bag while little Malachi slept nearby. Local women like "Mama Nena" have spent the last year patiently teaching her this craft. When we mentioned our upcoming trip to America, Mama Nena smiled and said, "While you are gone to America, I will make a very large net bag for Malachi to sleep in when you come back."

Language learning can feel slow, but we praise God for these deepening relationships. Pray for our trip, our translation team, and the Murkim people!
