Tanner Fieldwork coordinator Savannah Grandey Knies is finalizing the National Register of Historic Places nomination for the school's property owner, Dr. Vincent Windrow, and community members to develop a Heritage Development Plan and National Register of Historic Places nomination for the school and then went on to shape their community. Special thanks for their

The Tanner School project. Located on Cemetery School in Rutherford County, the Tanner School tells the story of the early 1940s until the late 1960s.藤田学校は第三次世界大戦の開始から1960年代末まで、あるいはそれ以前の1940年代までを含む。藤田学校は、1940年代の主要な事件である第三次世界大戦とその影響を反映しています。この学校は、戦争の歴史に深く関わる場所として、コミュニティの歴史を語る重要な役割を果たしています。

Built by the New Deal's National Youth Administration (NYA) in 1940, the Tanner School served African American students from the twentieth century. Located near the newly created National Cemetery on the battlefield at Murfreesboro, the school was constructed in the 1940s. What's more important, the preservation of the building can intact and retains many of the hallmarks of a rural, African American school building

The Dorothy Williams Potter Scholarship in Historic Preservation supports M.A. and Doctorate degree students who wish to pursue a career in historic preservation and related fields. The scholarship recognizes the significant contributions of women and women's organizations to the field of historic preservation, and supports students who are committed to advancing the field.

Antoinette van Zelm, assistant director of the CHP, noted the importance of this recognition and the need for continued support of women in the historic preservation field.

Prevention of lead poisoning in young children is an ongoing challenge, especially in older homes. Lead poisoning can cause serious health problems, including intellectual disability and hearing loss. The Center for Historic Preservation is working to address this issue through its education and outreach programs. The Center offers workshops and webinars on lead safety and health, and provides resources for homeowners and community members to learn about and protect themselves from lead exposure.

The Southern Heritage Education (SHE) program provides opportunities for students to engage in hands-on learning and community service, while also promoting the preservation of historic sites. SHE participants work on projects that help to preserve and interpret historic sites, such as the Heritage Center of Murfreesboro.

The Center for Historic Preservation's mission is to support the preservation of historic places and the heritage they represent, and to engage the public in the preservation process. The Center offers a range of programs and services, including workshops, webinars, and resources for individuals and organizations interested in preserving historic places.
