COP: Coefficient of Performance is a measurement of how effectively a heat pump uses electricity to move heat.

Capacity Ratio: the ratio between the load at a given outdoor temperature and the maximum capacity of the heat pump at that given outdoor temperature; a higher capacity ratio means the heat pump will produce more heat at low temperatures.

Cold climate heat pumps have greater capacity at lower temperatures, so while standard heat pumps will switch to less efficient aux or backup heat usually around 35-40 degrees, a cold climate heat pump will be able to run efficiently to sub-zero temperatures.
