The reasons for this change in consumption put forward by women are numerous. During her lifetime, a woman uses between -

10,000 — 17,000

- disposable sanitary protection, pads or tampons.

These products represent a regular and expensive investment and sometimes contain harmful substances, pesticides and all kinds of by-products, which can have an impact on health but also on the environment. In addition, there are potential discomforts associated with conventional sanitary protection: urinary tract infections, yeast infections and fear of toxic shock syndrome.
