Your personal situation and whether you file under Chapter 7 or under Chapter 13 will dictate when and how much of your debt will be discharged. Listed below are only a few of the types of debt bankruptcy can help you eliminate:

- Medical bills
- Mortgages
- Car loans
- Credit card charges, interest and late fees
- Past-due utility bills
- Unpaid rent
- Personal loans
- Some tax debts
- Car accident claims
- Social Security overpayments

"A court can deny your bankruptcy petition for failing to follow strict rules, preventing any debts from being discharged. Don't trust your future to an inexperienced lawyer." — Attorney Drake Ozment

We Can Still Help When You Have Debts That Cannot Be Discharged

Student loans and unpaid child support are examples of debt that are generally not dischargeable through bankruptcy for public policy reasons. If you are suffering from the weight of these debts, it does not mean that your situation is hopeless. Bankruptcy can still help with your overall financial situation, and there are some exceptions and alternative ways to deal with debts that cannot be discharged.
