WE ARE DOWNTOWN MONROEVILLE

We are a place where the power of words has shaped how we are seen and how we portray ourselves. As the literary capital of Alabama, writers from here have gone on to influence our state, country, and world. We are the home to authors of fiction, nonfiction, journalism, essays, poetry, and music.

Yet, the passages of prose that have come to define us also relate to the passages of time. We are a small Alabama town, built on timber and farms, grown through the complex weave of manufacturing, and matured through the mixture of people from here, who have come here, and who have returned here to enjoy our incredible natural surroundings.

Here the turn of a phrase means more than writing on a page. We are a friendly hello on the street, a warm welcome at a locally owned shop, a blessing over a home cooked meal, a sincere thank you for visiting, and a comforting voice in a time of need. We are a place where words written and spoken can become words to live by. We are writing the next page of our future. We are reinventing our downtown with new shops, restaurants, services, and events. Generations gather on the square to watch movies, parades, and a remarkable play. Here, we look up to our Courthouse dome aware of our storied past with soaring optimism for our future.

We invite you to be apart of our story. Ours is a remarkable historic narrative, a tale of a community that comes together, and a place scripting a bright future.
