

Sermon Title: Reconciliation

Sermon blurb: As youngster's we are taught the importance of saying sorry. We say sorry if we had made a mess. We say sorry if we were mean to a sibling, our parents, a stranger, or our friends. And we are taught the importance of being sincere with our apologies. We know there is nothing worse than someone saying they are sorry and not meaning it.

But sometimes we don't say sorry right away. Actions have been done in the past. For years we ignored these bad actions that we have done. Now years later, generations later, how do we say sorry and make it genuine. The simple words, I am sorry, ring false offered so many years and generations later.

It is 11 years since the National Truth and Reconciliation met and made promises of how we could be reconciled with our brothers and sisters. What progress have we made? What changes have happened? What more do we have to do? Join us Sunday as we talk about reconciliation.
