NATURAL ORGANIC REDUCTION

Natural organic reduction, sometimes called human composting or terramation, is an alternative to burial or cremation. The deceased is placed in a specially designed vessel with organic materials. Over several weeks, a controlled biological process transforms the remains into soil, which may be returned to the family or handled according to the receiving facility's options.

HOW YOUR ARRANGEMENTS WOULD WORK

Crawford Funeral Home would coordinate arrangements locally, including removal from the place of death, required documentation and authorizations, refrigerated care, and transportation to an authorized natural organic reduction provider. The family will contact their chosen provider to make arrangements for their services.
