A citizen reported he received a pop-up message on his computer screen advising him that his computer had been hacked. Fraudsters outside the United States eventually convinced the citizen to send thousands of dollars in Bitcoin to them so they could assist him with this problem. The citizen victim lost all the money in the scam.

Sheriff White reminds all citizens that if someone is trying to convince you to divert funds from your bank to gift cards, digital currency, or Bitcoin, to rectify some problem, it is most likely a scam. Also, if you have never changed the default password to your internet router, please do so and safeguard the password, as this is the most common way scammers access your computer to initiate these types of fraudulent events.
