BITCOIN

Since its launch into the market in 2009, Bitcoin has become the number one cryptocurrency in the world.

It is a digital asset, able to be traded between buyers and sellers or on exchanges because it is a store of value. In some countries it is considered the same as cash and in others as a valuable commodity.

Bitcoin's value is in its fungibility, able to be transferred almost instantly between owners anywhere in the world, without any third party such as a bank or government.

Bitcoin transactions are publicly available on the blockchain, a record that cannot be altered or edited.

This ensures security and transparency unlike anything in the world before it.
