Duccio di Buoninsegna (13th century-1319) Call of Peter and Andrew from the Maestà in Siena (1308-1311).

The first reading this week from Isaiah 8:23-9:3 relates a promise of the restoration of the regions of Zebulon and Naphtali (the areas in Israel that were parceled out to the tribes of Zebulon and Naphtali, which were the first to be taken by Assyria after the Syro-Ephramite War in 732 B.C.). The prophecy is connected to the announcement of Hezekiah as king, who hoped to restore the kingdom of Israel to the borders of David's time. Matthew has shifted the prophecy to refer to Capernaum (actually in Naphtali) where Jesus goes to live after the arrest of John. "The people who walked in darkness have seen a great light; upon those who dwelt in the land of gloom a light has shone." In Matthew this refers to Jesus and the gospel he is proclaiming.

When he calls the first disciples, Peter and Andrew, James and John, it is in the context of this light that they respond. This image from the Maestà altarpiece by Duccio sets the scene in the context of time out of time: the background is gold, very much in the tradition of Byzantine art, which aimed to create a portal to the divine through two-dimensional images set in glory (icons of the Byzantine era were a response to the Iconoclast Controversy that spanned the 8th-9th centuries, which claimed that sacred images in three dimensions were idolatry). Rather than pinning the call of the disciples in one point in history, the call begins to transcend history, even to the current moment, which would have included the people of Duccio's time as well as ours. We too are asked to shift the focus of our lives, turning from lives committed to the temporary towards lives committed to eternity...turning from what we can achieve to what God can achieve in and through us.
