Unknown 8 th century artist, Joseph's Dream, Castelseprio (southeast of Milan), Italy.

Joseph has no lines in Sacred Scripture. We assume he could speak...we do not hear what he has to say. We do get to know his mind. He wants to do what is right according to the Law of Moses, but he is not interested in bringing any harm to Mary: he wants to divorce her quietly rather than subject her to the extreme of the law – stoning. We also know that he was a man of faith: he believed in God and in doing God's will. In the Bible, dreams are one of the more common ways in which God's revelation comes to mankind. Think of Joseph's namesake, Joseph, the son of Jacob, whose own dreams come to pass, and his ability to understand them saves the future of Israel. Our Joseph, the man betrothed to Mary, believes in revelation, and he listens to his dream. He does not say anything, he does something: precisely what God's messenger instructed him to do.

We are not so comfortable with revelation or silence. In our anxiety, we talk endlessly, sometimes even in our prayer, making it so that we might never actually experience revelation. Next time you pray, be silent. Listen to God's endless expressions of love for you and your world, his invitation for you to join him in that love. See where the revelation takes you.

I visited Castelseprio back in 2011 (it was a very complicated journey including busses not running on Sunday and a long walk). And I realize this seems like a strange image, because it is not in very good condition, but I was profoundly moved when I first saw it, for a number of reasons. First, the movement of the Angel, apparently rushing in and reaching out to touch the mind (or perhaps the heart) of Joseph who is asleep.

The paint loss, for me, reminded me he was asleep. The divine purpose seems clear...the Angel seems to be filled with joy. The painting should not exist...it is painted in a Byzantine style, and yet the figures are three-dimensional in three-dimensional space, painted between 700 and 800...Giotto will finally break that boundary in the 1300's. Scholars could only connect it to its period by the "Joshua Scroll" in the Vatican Library. How is God reaching out to us as we prepare to celebrate the Incarnation of his Son?
