THE JACK SALOON HISTORY

Construction on The Jack Saloon, aka The Lumberjack, was begun in 1972 by Don and Mary Ellen Babcock with help from many of their logger friends. Comprised completely of Cedars logged just over the border in Idaho, the structure was completed and opened in 1974.

The large, beautiful bar is made from one massive log that was carved out to make room for sinks and bar service. It was set in place first and the log walls were built around it. The massive fireplace was not part of the original construction. It was added later using stones collected in Graves Creek by Mary Ellen Babcock and her daughter Kella.

The Lumberjack was truly a bar built by lumberjacks, for lumberjacks so they would have a place in the woods to drink and relax.

The Larkin family acquired The Lumberjack in 1994. Julie, Stuart, and Mary Jo operated the bar off and on from then until 2021. Stuart's wife, Patty, joined Stuart and Mary Jo from 2013 until 2021. At some point the name was changed from The Lumberjack to The Jack Saloon for legal reasons.

The iconic bar was featured in the 2013 film "The Best Bar in America." It was one stop in the main characters search for the best bar, but the only bar in the film in which the words, "See, isn't this the best bar in America?" are spoken.

Greg and Kathy Alexander acquired The Jack Saloon in June of 2021. Their goal is to bring back the glory of the historic saloon with live music, events, and to continue the good times that have been had for the past 50 years.

The Jack Saloon has become an iconic destination in Western Montana. Our guests include both locals and tourists. Many visitors have stories to tell of their experiences at "The Jack." Memories can still be seen on the walls, timber beams and posts, as well as in the guest books located by the back door.
