

About David Parrish

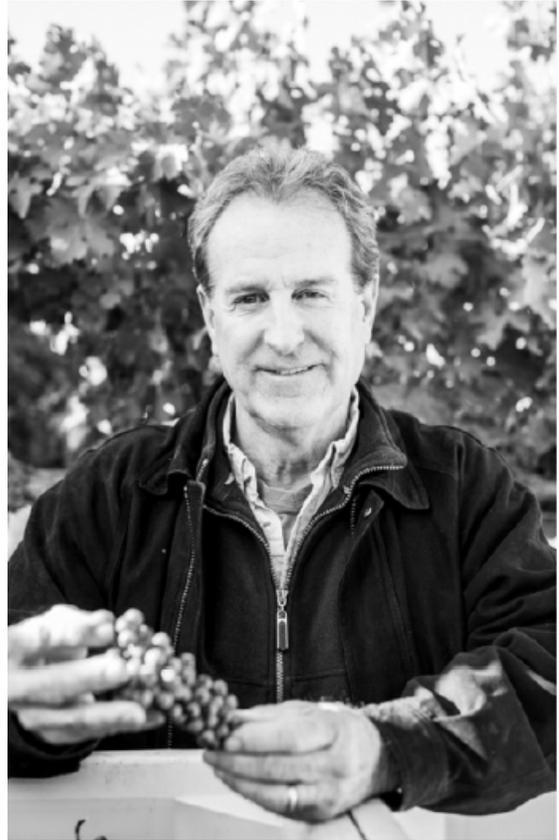

Owner & Winemaker

David Parrish's grandfather, Earl Henderson, was one of the first grape growers on the Central Coast, having planted 740 acres of grape vines in Atascadero in 1927. As a child, David spent a lot of time with his grandfather on his ranch, where he learned the ins and outs of farming.

David graduated from UC Davis in 1974 and started a vineyard trellising company. He was fortunate to meet a group of Napa growers who wanted to make Napa a world class wine growing region. After his Davis professor, Dr. Kliewer, convinced him to take up the invite to work with these Napa growers, David moved to Napa and started working with Robert Mondavi and Bob Steinhauer of Beringer Winery. After a few months, he was working with most of the wineries in the Napa area.

Though the experience of working with Napa greats was rewarding, David always wanted to return to the Central Coast and grow his own grapes. With the vision of continuing the family legacy, David planted 40 acres of Cabernet Sauvignon on his Creston ranch in 1995. In 2004, he made his first vintage of Cabernet Sauvignon; in 2011 opened the family's first tasting room in Downtown Paso Robles; and in 2013 planted 30 acres at his Adelaida Vineyard. David, along with his family, opened a premier tasting room and winery at the Adelaida Vineyard in 2018. The new tasting room features stunning vineyard views, warm hospitality, and delicious food offerings by his daughter and son-in-law.

Since 1995, David's passion has been Cabernet Sauvignon. He strives to produce rounded, full bodied Cabernets with an elegant finish that are approachable and sophisticated. His dedication to his craft has led to numerous accolades for this wines and constant innovation in the vineyard and winery.
