ANTIX

"It's all about the art of deception to them. They distract, you react, they strike. They flatter you, then propose a deal. You give them what they want, and they'll give you what you think you want."

— Raintooth, Sador River Constable

Summary

The Antix are a cunning and adaptable species that have learned to survive in the Beyond by being clever deceivers. To survive in a galaxy where conquest and doom are inevitable, the Antix have adopted a simple yet effective strategy: Be everywhere.

This approach has allowed the Antix to slip into every corner of nearly every society and faction, becoming part and parcel with everyday life for citizens of the Beyond. As such, they are not perceived as a large threat or even one that needs to be controlled. Instead, they have found their purpose in small victories on the individual level, generally in matters of commerce.

Mischief and Markets

The Antix are often shrewd and gutsy negotiators, never hesitating to use language barriers to their advantage or spin yarns to get the best deal possible. In the bustling markets of the Beyond, it's not uncommon to find Antix peddling their wares with a silver tongue and mischievous grin.

While they may be small and nonthreatening, the Antix continually prove their ability to adapt and thrive in the Beyond.
