What a great last two months for Omaha United! ❤️ 🌐 Three of our teams traveled to Las Vegas to compete in two top winter events.

In January, our 2014G Black and 2012G Black competed in the Las Vegas Cup, while in February our 2013G Black took the field at the Las Vegas Mayor's Cup.

These tournaments provided an incredible experience for all three teams. Playing strong, high-level competition during the winter is how we continue to grow, develop, and raise our standard. Challenging ourselves against tough opponents is the only way to truly improve — and our players embraced that challenge.

“Ready for the Spring Sports? Here’s How to Stay Injury-Free”

The sun is shining, the grass is greener, and the air feels a little warmer. It’s finally spring! For many athletes, that means getting back to their favorite sports, whether it’s hitting the baseball field, joining a soccer league, or training for a big race. But before you lace up your cleats or grab your gear, it’s important to take steps to protect your body.

Spring is a prime time for sports injuries, especially after a long winter break. Fortunately, with a little preparation and smart training, you can stay in the game and avoid being sidelined.

Dr. David Rodriguez, a sports medicine specialist at St. Joseph’s Health explains, “Spring sports often bring a sudden increase in physical activity after months of less movement, which can lead to muscle strains, ligament tears, and overuse injuries. The key is to gradually build strength, improve flexibility, and listen to your body.”

Here’s what you need to know to prevent common spring sports injuries and keep yourself performing at your best.

Warm Up and Cool Down Like a Pro

Skipping a warm-up is one of the biggest mistakes athletes make. Warming up gets your blood flowing, increases muscle temperature, and preps your body for more intense movement.

“Start with 5 to 10 minutes of light cardio like jogging or jumping jacks, followed by dynamic stretches that mimic the movements you’ll be doing in your sport,” encourages Dr. Rodriguez. “Dynamic stretches, such as leg swings or arm circles, help improve range of motion and reduce the risk of injury.”

Don’t forget the cool-down. After practice or a game, spend a few minutes stretching and doing light movements to gradually lower your heart rate. This helps prevent stiffness and promotes faster recovery.

Ease Back Into Activity

If you’ve been less active over the winter, resist the urge to go full speed ahead as soon as spring hits. Sudden bursts of intense activity can strain muscles, connective tissue, and joints that aren’t ready for the load.

“Take your time to rebuild endurance and strength,” advises Dr. Rodriguez. “Increase activity levels gradually over a few weeks. This approach gives your muscles and ligaments time to adapt, reducing the risk of overuse injuries.”

A good rule of thumb is to increase intensity or duration by no more than 10% each week.

Stay Hydrated and Fuel Your Body

Hydration and nutrition play a bigger role in injury prevention than most athletes realize. Dehydrated muscles are more prone to cramping and fatigue, which can lead to poor form and increased injury risk.

“Drink plenty of water before, during, and after activity, especially as temperatures rise in the spring,” Dr. Rodriguez suggests. “Also, make sure you’re eating nutrient-rich foods that support muscle recovery and overall performance.”

Foods high in protein, healthy fats, and complex carbs give your body the fuel it needs to perform and recover effectively.

Listen to Your Body and Rest When Needed

Pushing through pain is never a good idea. Mild discomfort can quickly escalate into a serious injury if ignored. “Pay attention to early warning signs like soreness that doesn’t go away, swelling, or decreased range of motion,” cautions Dr. Rodriguez. “Taking a break and allowing your body to heal is always better than being forced to sit out for weeks due to a preventable injury.”

If something doesn’t feel right, take a day or two off to rest and ice the affected area. If the pain persists, it’s best to seek medical advice.

Wear the Right Gear for Your Sport

Protective gear is essential for reducing the risk of injury. Make sure your equipment fits properly and is in good condition. “Helmets, pads, braces, and supportive footwear play a big role in preventing sports-related injuries,” recommends Dr. Rodriguez. “Don’t overlook the importance of wearing gear that’s appropriate for your activity.”

For runners and athletes who spend a lot of time on their feet, replacing worn-out shoes can help prevent foot, ankle, and knee pain.

Stay Safe and Enjoy the Season

Spring sports are a great way to stay active, have fun, and build lifelong skills. By taking steps to protect your body, you can reduce the risk of injury and enjoy a safe, successful spring sports season. Remember, staying proactive with warm-ups, proper technique, and listening to your body is your best defense against sports-related injuries.
