

Associate Artist – Rachel Jones

I am a visual artist, and my practice blends street art, digital technology, and moving image, using spray paint, stencils, and live visual mixing to explore memory, identity, and collective experience. I'm particularly interested in how visual culture expresses grief, local heritage, and voices that sit outside the mainstream.

Alongside my own practice, I work with neurodiverse young people, using art as a way to build confidence, agency, and connection—especially for those with school trauma. My work often sits between education, community, and contemporary art, playfully challenging traditional ideas of authorship, value, and what art is for.
