Wind, Fire, and the Unfinished Work of Pentecost

On the day of Pentecost, the Spirit arrived without asking permission. It rushed in like wind, — disruptive, ungovernable — and rested as fire on people who had gathered not in triumph but in uncertainty. They were waiting, as we so often are, unsure of what came next. And what came next changed everything.

Pentecost is sometimes called the birthday of the Church, but perhaps it is better understood as a commissioning. The disciples had walked with Jesus, witnessed his death, encountered the risen Christ — and still they lingered in an upper room. It took the Spirit's wild arrival to move them out the door and into the streets, speaking across barriers of language and culture, finding that the sacred could no longer be contained in any single room or tradition.

This is the Pentecost invitation for us: not simply to commemorate something that happened long ago, but to ask where the Spirit is pressing us out the door today.

Discipleship, in the Pentecost tradition, is not a quiet, private affair. It is communal. It is public. It calls us to show up at the edges — to the people the empire overlooked, to the languages not yet spoken in the halls of power, to the relationships that cross every boundary we assumed were fixed. The early community described in Acts was known not for its purity or its correctness, but for its radical mutual care: they held all things in common.

As we move through this season of Ordinary Time, may we resist the ordinary temptation to keep the Spirit safely indoors. May we follow where the wind leads — into the uncomfortable, the beautiful, the necessary work of building the beloved community, together.

Happy Pentecost!
See You Sunday,
Rev. Michelle

Textile Drive

Do you have old, stained or damaged clothing, sheets, bedding, purses or other textiles laying around your house? Now is the time to bring them to church. This Spring we will be participating in the textile drive for the Oakland County Foster Closet. They get paid by the pound to recycle old material so all that stuff that is too damaged to donate elsewhere can help support kids in need. See flyer below for exactly what they take and how to package it. Special pink bags are available at church in the narthex and fellowship hall. Please return items to be recycled to the first classroom next to the kitchen off the fellowship hall. If you have other higher quality still usable/salable items you can package them separately and put them in the hall by the bathrooms. Adult items will go to Grace Centers of Hope and kids items and luggage will go to the actual Foster Closet (see flyer below for their needs).
