History of Halloween

Celts, living in England, Ireland and parts of France (2,000 yrs ago) celebrated a festival called Samhain, the end of the year, which was 10/31. It marked the end of harvest & the beginning of winter. They believed the night before New Years (11/1) a passage opened up between the living & the dead unleashing the spirits of both good & bad to mingle with the living, as well as Fairies. Fairies disguised themselves as beggars & roamed door to door looking for food, those that gave food were rewarded those that didn't were punished. Celts dressed in animal costumes & wandered the neighborhood making noises to scare the spirits away.
