Meet Lily ...

Lily was diagnosed with Leukemia at Vanderbilt Children's Hospital on December 1, 2008, at the age of 7. Her doctor explained leukemia cells were like weeds that crowd out the good flowers in a garden.

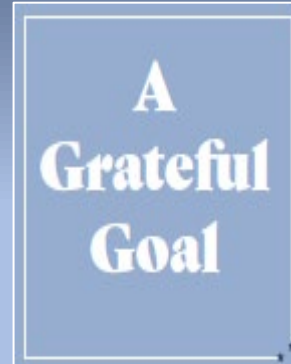

For over two years, Lily received chemotherapy to kill "all the weeds" so that only healthy "flowers" would grow in "Lily's Garden". She completed treatment on February 20, 2011.

In September 2016, 5 years, 7 months and 6 days from her last chemo treatment, Lily relapsed with leukemia. She finished receiving an additional two years of intense chemotherapy and immunotherapy in September 2018.

Lily set a goal initially to raise $1 Million for childhood cancer research so no child will have to go through what she has gone through. Having met her initial goal, she now says she won't stop till there is a CURE!

Today, Lily is enrolled in the Physicians Assistant Program at Kansas State University where her dedication to finding a cure for childhood cancer continues.

As a leader in childhood cancer care, Vanderbilt relies on philanthropic contributions to aid in their discovery process and ensure that programs continue to enhance the care that patients and families receive.

Momentum Magazine -Winter 2025, By Danny Bonvissuto

Lily's Garden Leukemia Program at Monroe Carell Jr. Children's Hospital at Vanderbilt provides critical funding to advance pediatric cancer research with a strong focus on finding cures that are not only effective, but far less toxic for children. By supporting innovative, forward-thinking studies, the program empowers researchers to explore targeted therapies and new treatment approaches designed to improve survival rates while reducing long-term side effects.

These efforts are especially important in pediatric leukemia, where traditional treatments, while lifesaving, can often come with lasting impacts on a child's development and overall health. Through continued investment in cutting-edge research, Lily's Garden is helping drive breakthroughs that aim to cure more children while preserving their quality of life for years to come.

At the same time, the program recognizes that behind every diagnosis is a family navigating an incredibly difficult journey. By offering support, resources, and a sense of community, Lily's Garden ensures families are not alone—bringing hope for better treatments, gentler cures, and brighter, healthier futures for every child affected by leukemia.
