MEET THE OWNERS

In the village of Hariraydih, located in the Deori block of Giridih District in Jharkhand, around forty families from the Dusadh, Hazara, and Teli Pasi communities rely on daily wage labor, small-scale farming, and animal husbandry for their livelihood.

For years, access to clean water has been a daily struggle. Situated on a rocky plateau, the village depends on small ponds and seasonal lakes, while drinking water is often nearly a kilometer away. During the summer, water sources dry up, forcing families—and even their cattle—to travel long distances in search of water while waiting for the monsoon rains.

Because drilling a deep borewell was beyond the community's means, Quenched stepped in after learning of the urgent need. After visiting the village and consulting with residents, the team determined that a deep borewell was the most sustainable solution.

Under the leadership of Evangelist Shambhu Kumar Sah and with strong community support, a 295-foot borewell was successfully drilled. This well has brought relief, dignity, and renewed hope—especially for women, girls, and the elderly—restoring safety and easing the daily burden of water collection.
