MEET THE RECIPIENTS

My name is Hari Saday, and I live in Kalabanjar village, Siraha district, in Mid-East Nepal. Most of us here belong to the Saday community. We come from low-income families and face many hardships because of our poor economic situation.

For years, one of our biggest struggles has been the lack of clean and reliable drinking water. Before the well was installed, collecting water was a daily challenge. Most families did not have their own wells, so we had to depend on private well owners. Many of them refused to share water with us. When we asked, they would shout at us and sometimes deny us water even when their wells were full. It became so difficult that children were often too scared to ask, because they knew they might be yelled at or turned away.

Because of the shortage, even simple tasks like washing, bathing, cooking, and cleaning were extremely hard. The small amount of water we could collect was often dirty, but we had no choice but to use it. Many days we waited for hours or walked long distances just to find water, and even then we were never sure we would get enough.

We asked the government for help many times, but no one listened. It felt like nobody cared about our community. We knew we could not continue living with unsafe and unreliable water. Having clean water was not just about comfort—it was about survival.

Then Quenched came and installed a well, and everything changed. Now we have a clean and reliable water source that we can use whenever we need it. More than 50 people benefit from it every day, and families no longer fight over water. The well is located near the road in a public area, so visitors and farmers also benefit from it.

Children are no longer afraid to ask for water. We don't have to walk for miles anymore, and we no longer have to use dirty water that could make us sick. This well has brought peace back to our community, restored dignity, and given us hope for a better future. I am deeply thankful to Quenched for their help. This well was not a luxury—it was something we desperately needed. It has brought better health, relief, and a brighter future for our families.

THANK YOU FOR YOUR PARTNERSHIP!
