

The cover of 'we serve magazine' features a photograph of three young Black women. They are all wearing white, intricately patterned lace dresses. The woman on the right has her hair styled in long braids and is looking towards the camera with a slight smile. The woman in the middle is smiling broadly, looking slightly to the side. The woman on the left is also smiling and looking towards the camera. The background is a soft-focus outdoor setting with green foliage. The magazine title 'we serve magazine' is overlaid in the top left corner. 'we' is in a small white font inside a white circle, 'serve' is in a large red font, and 'magazine' is in a smaller white font below it.

The Hinges of Life

A life-altering moment that reframed faith, family, and calling

BY TRAVIS RUTLAND

On January 11, 2026, I had just finished preaching on a Sunday morning at Liberty Square. I was removing my microphone and gathering my stuff when I suddenly had an intense pain in my chest. At first, I thought it was just heart burn or something minor. However, that pain quickly spread down my left arm and then my left hand went numb.

Courtney was sick that day and my parents were out of town on vacation. However, our oldest son, Mark, and his wife, Katie were at church. Some of their mail had come to our house over the weekend and Katie followed me to my office to retrieve it. That walk from the sanctuary to my office was the longest of my life. I could feel myself getting weaker and more tired with every step. By the time we reached my office, I had to sit down. For a moment, I thought I might just drive home and take a nap since Courtney was already there. Instead, I attempted to listen to what my body was saying. I quickly came to the sobering reality that I was having a heart attack. I told Katie what I thought was wrong and she and Mark drove me to the hospital. I went straight to the ER and the doctors and nurses almost immediately diagnosed that my suspicions were a reality. I was having a heart attack.

I was quickly wheeled into Cath Lab 2 and the doctors installed a stent in my main front artery. After the procedure, the doctor told me that the artery had been 100% blocked and that if I had gone home to nap, I would have died. He told me that this type of blockage is “the widow maker.” I was wheeled into a room in the ICU for recovery and I looked at the clock on the wall. It was 2:15pm. I had finished my sermon 2 hours previously! The idea that so much of my life and ministry could change in 2 hours was shocking. In that moment, I became a heart attack survivor whose new reality consisted of cardiac rehab 3 times a week and a cocktail of 7 different medications taken daily.

There are moments in the history of humanity that change on a single decision or “hinge.” A ruler makes this decision or an army fights this consequential battle and everything changes. There are also hinges in each of our lives. Moments that begin very normal and ordinary but change everything.

January 11, 2026, was just such a hinge for me. The days since that day have been difficult in certain ways. Every twinge in my chest is now worrisome. I had no previous symptoms or problems. I literally had no idea that anything was wrong. So, those concerning thoughts remain in the back of your mind. I did not know anything was wrong the last time. How will I know if anything is wrong the next time? Am I really getting better? Is my heart function returning? I am not obsessed with these thoughts but they definitely flutter at the corners of my mind.

However, there are other different thoughts that now parade themselves through my mind. These are more positive and the ones that I choose to focus on. I want to be a better husband and father. In those moments in hospitals, you realize what is important and who is important. How can I leave a legacy for my sons to follow? Am I present in my life? For example, am I focused on the people that matter or am I wasting my hours staring at a screen?

The same kind of ideas hold true for Global Servants. I have worked at Global Servants for almost 30 years and been the president for 8 of those years. I have not ever felt lackadaisical or complacent towards Global Servants. However,

Travis Rutland and his son Mark, the newest face on the Global Servants team.

“ I AM COMMITTED TO DOING ALL THAT I CAN WITH THE TIME THAT IS GIVEN TO ME.”

I do feel newly invigorated to the task ahead. I want to stay focused on finding new projects and new people that we can help and serve.

In the midst of these last several months, we have added a new member to the Global Servants team. Our oldest son, Mark, went to House of Grace-Thailand for the first time last year and he was totally transformed by the experience. He came home and started talking to me about how he could help continue the legacy that papa (my dad) had started and I have continued. He told me that he felt a calling to Global Servants that he had never felt before and he wanted to help the ministry. I was thrilled to hear this call on his life and I was excited to add him to the staff at Global Servants. I cannot wait to see all that God has for him in the future. I believe that in the years to come, this moment will be a hinge in Mark’s life that he may not fully understand or appreciate now.

We will all have multiple “hinge” moments throughout our lives. Some will be positive and wonderful. Others will be scary and difficult. I have learned not to run from those hinges but instead to embrace all that God is doing. There is a wonderful moment in the book The Lord of the Rings. One character realizing the enormity of a moment that has manifested itself in his life reacts with fear and alarm. “I wish it need not have happened in my time,” said Frodo. “So do I,” said Gandalf, “and so do all who live to see such times. But that is not for them to decide. All we have to decide is what to do with the time that is given us.”

I am honored to continue the work of Global Servants. I was humbled by all your prayers, cards, calls, and visits. I am so grateful for all that you do. I do not know all that lies ahead for me or Global Servants. However, I am committed to doing all that I can with the time that is given to me. God bless you in all things! ◀

Aren't You Somebody?

The question that changed everything

BY DR. MARK RUTLAND

Her small face and sad, downcast eyes will forever be lodged among the worst of my memories. Also, there is his face, sullen, sneering, haughty and not a little dangerous. Worst of all was his brazenness. He was not sneaking around, whispering in some back alley. He was in the hallway of a beautiful international hotel that catered to a foreign clientele. He seemed certain that I would buy her for the night and acted as if he and I were sharing some kind of monstrous, horrifying dirty joke. Those two faces, the one drenched in miserable, hopeless fear and the other in cocky, lethal wickedness. Those two faces are the reason for House of Grace–Thailand and Ghana.

Indeed, as we continue to grow and expand into new areas of ministry and servanthood under Travis' visionary leadership, that pathetic child and that despicable pimp remain the primal motivating nightmare. It happened in 1986. Was that really forty years ago? Four decades?

I had just checked into my hotel when he knocked on the door. It was my first night in Thailand. I had landed earlier and the plan was to get a good night's sleep and have breakfast the next morning with my host, the Thai pastor of a large church in Bangkok. He had invited me to do an evangelistic crusade in Chiang Rai in hopes of planting a church with converts. I took a taxi from the airport to my hotel and had just started unpacking when that fateful knock on my door changed everything.

A man and a small girl stood in the hall. Her head was down but he put his fingers under her chin and lifted her face in an obvious invitation for me to look at her. His first words were shocking and unveiled. For $400 American I could have the child for the night, her first night with a man, I was assured with a lewd smirk. Perhaps the horror of child sex trafficking was as well publicized forty years ago as it is today. Perhaps, but if it was, I was not aware of it. I was shocked and horrified, and I threatened to call the police, at which he laughed. He mocked me. He threatened me and he dismissed me.

"Go in your room, Farang (foreigner). This not America. In Thailand, I call cops, not you. I put you in prison. I have you killed in prison. Go back in your room and shut your mouth. I sell this girl before I get to the end of hall and there is nothing you can do about it."

I knew intuitively that he was right, and when he shoved me back in the room and slammed my own door in my face, I stood there in futile, impotent shock. What had just transpired seemed unreal, like a ghastly nightmare. I finally recovered enough to open the door. What I hoped to do I have no idea, but it was futile anyway. They were gone.

That pimp and that small girl, especially the girl, and her tragic eyes haunted my sleep that night. They also changed my world.

The next morning over breakfast I told the Thai pastor about it, fully expecting him to share my shock and horror. Instead, he was rather blasé. When I expressed my disgust, he was defensive and somewhat dismissive. He said something like, well, it's a big problem here. In fact, all over Southeast Asia. Yes, child prostitution is terrible, but it is mostly foreigners who come here for that sort of thing. It's bad but... All this was followed by a somewhat dismissive shrug.

I was not happy with his apparent unconcern. "It's horrible," I said. "You didn't see her. It was heart-breaking. Somebody should do something. I mean it." Admittedly I was speaking too loudly by this time. "It's not enough to know it's happening. Somebody should do something about it?"

He took it for a while, then he pointed his finger at my face and said something that redirected the major thrust of my life and ministry. He said:

"You're right. Somebody should do something. Aren't you somebody?"

I was gob smacked. Dumbstruck is more like it. That ended the conversation. He and I never spoke of it again. Not once. But his words were a slap in my face and forty years later, the sting never faded.

When I returned to America I told Alison the whole thing. We tumbled it around in our minds, occasionally discussing it as if we were actually trying to figure out what to do. Deep in our hearts we knew. There was never any real doubt. Our shared ministry, indeed, our whole lives were changed and there was no going back. We were committed. Somebody had to do something. It was as simple as that. And we were somebody.

Now... What should we do? That was the main question. We knew nothing about starting a children's home. How would we pay for it? Who would run it? How would we find the girls? How would we decide which ones to take in? How many? Where? Questions, aplenty. Answers, zero.

We could not wait for the answers because we would never have them. We finally realized we would never know how to start a girl's home in Thailand. Or how to run one. We weren't even sure of the questions let alone the answers. We certainly had no idea where the money would come from. Or the staff. Or even how to find the girls who needed help the most. We would never know if it would succeed or be an embarrassing disaster. Never.

What we could do was start. Just that. We began as every journey does with the first step. We just started. We had no money and no experience with a children's home and no clear plan. We just knew God was calling us. We believed He would guide and supply. We wondered, of course, what would become of it all, but we felt compelled to take the first step. We were off on another adventure begun yet again with ever so little in hand. What we did have was the grace of God and one devastating question that through all these years has never let go of us.

Now in 2026, House of Grace has beautiful campuses on two continents. I think of the millions of dollars raised and spent on land and lawyers and buildings and food and clothing and medicine and developing strong local leadership to run each home. All of it. And especially all the hundreds, literally hundreds, of precious little girls who have been saved for big destinies. Especially them. All of it happened because of a God of infinite grace and providence and a single question over a breakfast in Bangkok. Aren't you somebody? ◀

From Little Girls to Women of Purpose

How faith, education, and faithful sponsors have helped House of Grace girls overcome poverty and step boldly into the futures God prepared for them

By Fay Inman

You have often heard that education is the best way out of poverty. We at Global Servants certainly believe that it is true. We also believe that every child is designed by God for a purpose and that traditional academic education through the university system may not be the avenue out of poverty for everyone.

This year at House of Grace Ghana, the original ten girls are now adults and either enrolled in higher education or on track to attend this year. They are still under sponsor support and will be as long as they are attending school. Ninety percent of these young women are still sponsored by their original supporters, representing over ten years of financial and prayerful commitment.

In Thailand, four young women graduated with bachelor's degrees; two graduated from a technical college, and one holds a dual enrollment certificate from a vocational school alongside her high school diploma. Deciding to continue one's education is a challenge for everyone. It is a difficult decision to delay the prospect of freedom and commit to additional years of study and diligence. This choice is even heavier when you are the first in your family to attend a university, often requiring you to live among those from different socio-economic backgrounds and endure their scrutiny.

Now imagine you have lived in a group home with over 100 other sisters for at least 10 years. You have never eaten a meal by yourself. You have never walked or ridden a car to school alone. You have a team of adults who love you unconditionally and tutors on standby every afternoon if you have questions. You are surrounded by Christians who live a lifestyle of putting others first and want the best for you.

You come from an extended family that is in absolute poverty. You are not supported by your biological family in your desires for higher education. When you were younger, money for your primary education was not allocated because of your gender.

Making the decision to continue your education is not only going into uncharted territory, it is like launching out into an unknown ocean. The tenacity and determination it has taken these young women to accomplish so much is truly a testimony to their faith in God.

When these girls and many like them came to the House of Grace-Thailand over the past thirty years, they had no idea what God had in store for them. Most of the young women graduating have maintained the same sponsor family for their entire time at the home, from ten to fifteen years. The prayers and financial commitment of these families have only been matched by the hard work of the girls themselves. The relationships that have formed through letters, cards, videos, and in some instances, trips to Thailand have cemented the bond of sponsor and child. The prayers that have passed between them have been for support both ways. These families have experienced marriages, births, deaths, health crises, and significant life changes on both sides of the world. Prayers for healing, restoration, commitment, and purpose have passed between these international families, and the answers to those prayers celebrated.

We are grateful to every person who has made the commitment to save little girls for big destinies, because through the years, these little girls have grown into godly women of purpose and promise, who will make a difference in the world around them. You have made a way when the world tried to convince them there was not one. You have loved a person you may never meet and changed her life forever. Many of the House of Grace alumnae give back to the home regularly. This act of generosity was demonstrated through your love for them. Thank you, and congratulations to all the girls and their accomplishments! ◀

Water Without Walls

How one well in Larabanga is breaking barriers and building bridges for the Gospel in Northern Ghana

By Dr. Dan Odarno

In the Gospel of John chapter 4, Jesus breaks social, racial and gender barriers by speaking to a Samaritan woman at Jacob's Well in Sychar. He offers her "living water" that leads to eternal life, reveals her past, identifies Himself as the Messiah and teaches that true worship is not confined to a specific location but must be in spirit and in truth. When the Samaritan woman came to draw water, Jesus said to her, "Will you give me a drink?" (His disciples had gone into town to buy food.) He later told her, "If you knew the gift of God and who it is that asks you for a drink, you would have asked Him and He would have given you living water."

This passage is one of my favorite scriptures. Although the Samaritan woman did not initially know who Jesus was, she engaged in an open and honest conversation with Him. She freely expressed her thoughts and, in the end, became an evangelist to her entire community. Water drawn from Abraham's centuries-old well became the meeting point of grace and revelation that day.

Similarly, the town of Larabanga, located in the West Gonja District of the Savannah Region of Ghana, is home to notable landmarks such as Mole National Park, the Larabanga Mystery Stone, and the Larabanga Ancient Mosque considered the oldest mosque in Ghana and one of the oldest in West Africa, dating back to 1421 and built in the traditional Sudanese mud-and-stick style construction. Visitors to the national park often have the opportunity to explore these historic sites.

Teams from Global Servants have visited the park several times. However, during a team visit from Shorter University in March 2024, we had extra time and decided to walk from the Ancient Mosque to the site of the Mystery Stone. Along the way, we saw women carrying pans of water. Some members of the visiting team asked our tour guide, Mohammed, whether the village had challenges accessing water. His response was concerning. The community faced perennial water shortages from the only stream that runs through the village. Attempts to sink a standard borehole had proven ineffective due to the nature of the soil. A mechanized borehole was identified as the most sustainable solution to this ongoing problem.

Recognizing that the presence of the Ancient Mosque reflected a predominantly Muslim population, we respectfully asked Mohammed whether the town's leaders would permit us to construct a well for the community, as this aligns with our mission. After consultations with the elders, we were granted approval to proceed. Although there were one or two existing wells in the village, they were reserved solely for Muslim ritual ablution before prayers. Occasionally, a water truck arrives to supply residents, who then carry water back to their homes, providing an important supplement to the limited wells. In response, Global Servants aimed to provide an unrestricted water source accessible to the entire community, specifically for household use. As Global Servants' President Travis Rutland often quotes John Wesley: "Do all the good you can, for all the people you can, for as long as you can."

Previously, Global Servants constructed a sanitation unit for another village in northern Ghana. Upon completion, the chief instructed our pastor to inquire whether non-

Christians would be permitted to use the facility. When asked, Travis gave a firm and immediate "Yes." It is noteworthy that after this message was communicated through the chief, he and nearly all the village elders attended church the following Sunday to express their appreciation. Subsequently, we received a request to build a personalized sanitation unit exclusively for the chief.

Today, the town of Larabanga is blessed by this act of kindness. As the first Christian organization to donate a well to a predominantly Muslim community without any restrictions on its use, Global Servants has demonstrated Christ's love through action. With an estimated population of approximately 5,000 people, every resident of Larabanga now has equal access to clean water from the well.

Just as the Samaritan woman experienced the transforming love of Jesus at the well, the joy and relief felt by the people of Larabanga as they draw water from the well donated by Global Servants reflect that same spirit of compassion, unity, and grace. Though there is no church in this community, we trust the Lord will use this well, in His timing, to open hearts and create opportunities for the Gospel in Larabanga. ◀

A Mother's Dream, Redeemed

How God transformed one woman's longing for motherhood into a lasting legacy through three girls at House of Grace–Ghana

By Dr. Heather Gill

As a little girl I dreamed of becoming a wife and a mother. One of my sisters and I “played house” with baby dolls into our adolescent years. We lived in the country and would play for hours outside with our kitchen and strollers and cribs. I loved the thought of being a mother. As I entered my thirties, I still was not married and had no children. I grieved the loss of my dream, surrendered to God's will, and realized He was fulfilling my dream of motherhood according to His plan and not my conventional plan.

In 2011, Trinity Foundation built House of Grace-Ghana. At this time, ten young girls were chosen to come live at the House of Grace. These girls came from homes that were broken and could not provide for their needs. Through the grace of our Lord, I had the honor and blessing of sponsoring three of these girls. As I have watched these girls grow into young ladies, I have seen them blossom from shy children to confident ladies who know they are loved by Jesus and so many others. These ladies know they have value and worth in Christ and have a future and a hope. Their self-worth and confidence have grown, and their lives have been changed. Most importantly, these girls have been raised to be Godly women.

It is an honor and blessing to be celebrating that all ten of the original House of Grace-Ghana girls are now entering into higher education. I am thankful that God has opened the door for each of these ladies to graduate from high school and enter a new chapter in their life. Higher education changes the trajectory of an individual's life and of future generations. I am so excited to watch as God continues to write the story of each of my girls. I pray these ladies would excel and exceed all expectations as they trust in God for their future.

As I look back over my years of sponsorship, my prayer has always been that God would show my daughters how much He loves them and how precious they are in His eyes. He has answered that prayer over and over. This journey is a reflection of what Jesus does in each of our lives. He takes the broken and restores them and makes something beautiful in His timing and plans. It has been a pleasure and blessing to partner with House of Grace. Over the years, I have received frequent updates, school reports, pictures, and handwritten notes that I treasure. I thank God for taking a broken dream in my eyes and creating a beautiful story and allowing me to be a mother to these young ladies. To God be the glory!

Juliana's Road to Opportunity

In a country where opportunity is often shaped by access, mobility plays a quiet but powerful role in daily life. In Ghana, women make up 50.06% of the population as of 2024, according to the World Bank collection of development indicators, compiled from officially recognized sources. Yet access to vehicles remains limited. Looking at the auto market in Ghana, the number of new and used autos owned is around 890,000 vehicles. With a population of 28 million, Ghana's auto penetration rate is roughly 3%, about the same as the average for sub-Saharan Africa.

Men tend to hit the road more often than women. Studies by transportation agencies show men rack up more miles each year and spend more time behind the wheel. For many women in Ghana, the opportunity to learn to drive has historically been limited, often delayed until adulthood when they are financially able to purchase a vehicle. In many cases, women working in corporate settings take out loans to acquire cars before they have even had the opportunity to develop driving skills.

When Juliana was on summer break during her second year in college, she undertook a compulsory industrial attachment at the Department of Social Welfare at Oforikrom in Kumasi. This season became a turning point. With new responsibilities and greater independence, she embraced the opportunity to learn how to drive—an investment not only in her present needs but in her future potential.

Today, that skill represents far more than transportation. As House of Grace-Ghana continues to grow, with girls attending secondary schools and universities across the country, mobility has become a vital part of leadership and service. Juliana's determination reflects a broader shift: young women stepping forward, gaining practical skills, and expanding what is possible for themselves and others.

In a country where access to vehicles remains limited and driving opportunities for women are still emerging, each new driver represents progress. For Juliana and many like her, the road is no longer just a path to get somewhere—it is a pathway to independence, confidence, and opportunity.

From a Hilltop Vision to a Thriving Church

A 20-year journey of faith, partnership, and transformed lives in Duasi, Ghana

By Ronny Brannen

More than 20 years ago I was able to make my first trip to Ghana, West Africa. It was then that I met a young pastor and his wife, Peter and Gifty Antwi and their small boys. Peter was called to the village of Duasi, near the city of Kumasi, and he wanted to build a church there. He had a heart for sharing the gospel and seeing people saved, delivered, and brought into the Kingdom of God. While there, we held an outdoor crusade in the middle of that village and pointed to a spot up on a hill where he wanted to build his church. It was a great day as he and I walked through the village stopping at homes and businesses inviting people to come to the crusade that night. I spoke, Peter interpreted, and God moved in that place. We also shared in the vision of a church being planted on that hill overlooking this little village.

The church I was pastoring in Georgia sent money to help build that church, and Peter and his family immediately went to work with faith and determination. They invested long days and steady effort to see the vision become reality. When the building was finished, I had the privilege of returning to Ghana and preaching the dedication service that Sunday in July 2008. It was a joyful and unforgettable time of worship, gratitude, and testimony as we saw what God had done. Dr. Rutland, Travis Rutland, Sammy Odarno and I were there together to celebrate with this new and growing congregation, and the excitement and hope surrounding that day were unmistakable.

As we fast forward to 2022, I was able to return and the growth was amazing. Several new buildings have been added since my earlier visit. In addition to expanding the sanctuary, they built a pastor's home, a children's building, a small on-site guard house and sanitation stations for the church and the surrounding village. The entire area has experienced significant growth, and Pastor Peter continues faithfully sharing the gospel and discipling people, resulting in changed lives throughout the community.

Peter has continued to have a heart for God and for people. His children have grown up, and one is now a preacher and teacher, while another has become a physician. The entire family continues to be a blessing to those around them and remains deeply involved in serving their community. This past year Peter shared with us the need for a bus so that he could continue to reach out to those that were finding it difficult to get to church. Also, when they had evening services and activities it would make it possible to help get the children and the elderly safely home. So, this past Giving Tuesday we decided to make the purchase of that bus as our project. He had already raised $15,000 within the church and he needed $20,000 more to be able to purchase the bus and YOU DID IT! I cannot thank you enough for your generosity and for what it will mean in the life of this church and in the many lives it will touch through ongoing outreach and ministry. Because of your giving, more people will be reached, more families will be served, and more individuals will have the opportunity to hear the gospel and be connected to a caring church community. There will be those in heaven that you helped get there. Also, enough money was raised over the $20,000 mark for us to dig another well in a village in Ghana.

Again, you are making a huge difference in the lives of others, and we at Global Servants are deeply grateful for your faithful support. Your generosity continues to strengthen this work and encourage those serving on the ground. You truly amaze us, and the impact of your giving will continue to bless many more people in the days ahead. ◀
