Is glas iad na cnoic

"This series of multi-faceted paintings celebrates the everyday wonders of the living planet although feelings of anxiety, grief and loneliness are never far from the surface. The title of the series comes from the Irish proverb: the faraway hills are green, a reminder that what we have is already enough. Perhaps being confined during lockdown made us grateful for little things - like the singing of the blackbird or the reappearance of primroses - but for me, it also highlighted the precarious nature of the world we live in.

Mahatma Gandhi once wrote that there is enough on the planet for man's need but not enough for man's greed. What do we actually need? How much is enough? As the period of lockdown has shown, many of us can make do with a lot less than we had become accustomed to - but what about the arts? What about beauty? Can we do without beauty in our lives?

We don't have to. We have an awareness of beauty in our minds. We all have memories of different times and different places that we cherish. It was my memories that sustained me during these difficult times and inspired my new work.

The work has taken the form of windows, windows to worlds far away and out of reach. It was created incrementally, starting as daily sketches and small exercises in the studio, gradually coming together in larger compositions that were simultaneously figurative and abstract."

Please note that the online exhibition and catalogue also show/include details of some of the paintings. These are marked as 'detail' in their description and are not available separately.
