Notes on statistical records

This document is an attempt to compile the league's statistical history and records, to the degree that the underlying data exists. At the time of first compilation in 2025, official records (i.e. scorebooks) from some early contests had been lost. For others, only team scores and fouls were recorded, not individual scoring. For those games, attempts were made to obtain player scoring totals (and team scores, when missing) from the following alternative sources, in order of preference:

- 1) news articles (e.g. local newspapers)
- 2) school/team websites & social media accounts
- 3) other public social media posts (e.g. parents)
- 4) offline team records (e.g. coaches' notes)
- 5) offline records by others (e.g. parents)

After seeking information from all the above, we still lack individual scoring totals for 10-20% of games from 2018-2022, and nearly half from 2016-2018. As a result, early star players are likely under-ranked on the career scoring records lists.

Traditionally in high school (and other levels of) basketball, per-game scoring average is a preferred measure of offensive output. Until 2025, OIAS scorebooks did not contain a player participation category. In other words, for a player who did not score or commit a foul, there was no record of whether they entered a game, or even whether they were present. For this reason, we tend toward highlighting season scoring totals, rather than averages. Since top athletes are rarely shut out from scoring, in computing season scoring averages we assume that such players did not play in any game where they did not score, except in cases where we know otherwise.

In the absence of separate developmental (JV, middle school, etc.) teams, many athletes start playing for their schools while in elementary school, often while lacking the physical ability to shoot the ball over the rim. Some play for several years before scoring their first points. As a result, and because of the issues previously noted, we emphasize career scoring totals over career averages.

With the exception of the state championship game, other statistics (rebounds, assists, steals, etc.) are rarely recorded.
