From FR. C.P.:

What an amazing celebration of St. Patrick's Day that we had! Many people expressed to me personally how delighted they were to see so many parishioners turn up. As for me, I think every year since we began this yearly feature at our church, the number of people who show up for the mass and dinner keeps increasing. It goes without saying that many people volunteer to serve in various capacities to make this celebration enjoyable and meaningful for everyone. It is just the same way the other programs at our church are conducted too. We have many who are doing various ministries as far as the liturgical and other services at our church are concerned. We thank them all in a special way and want to appreciate all of their efforts. Often, we don't get a chance to recognize their hard work. Sometimes, we bypass those who work behind the stage and are not at the forefront. Let us learn to appreciate each other however small the contribution that each one makes. As we are approaching the Holy Week, I am sure there will be many opportunities to volunteer to do various ministries at the church. Please do them willingly and wholeheartedly. May God continue to bless all our efforts to make our spiritual journey more meaningful for all.

Catholic Living:

Justice: Retributive or Restorative

Mercy is the natural outflowing of grace:
These two versions of justice (retributive and restorative) compete for our allegiance. One leads to death. The other can lead to life, and to healing and redemption and other beautiful things. It's been said, "Mercy is not getting what you deserve, and grace is getting what you don't deserve." Both are beautiful, but both can also seem like a betrayal of justice. That's why justice can't just come out of our heads, but it also has to flow from our hearts. Grace and mercy are things, just like forgiveness, that exist in the context of evil, and in contrast to it. When all is well, grace and mercy are hard to notice. But when things are rough, they are hard to ignore. They shine brightly. Just as light shines in the darkness, grace is radiant next to evil.
Shane Clairborne, from CAC Daily Meditation
