

The Rev 2025 Edition Launch

Written by Skye Scacchetti, 2025 CU Intern

April 30th, 2025 was a busy day for the students and faculty of Russell Sage College. Undergraduate Research Day was underway and everyone seemed to have a million things to do. Thankfully, a wonderful bunch of folks were able to get together – both in person and over Zoom – to celebrate the launch of The Rev, the magazine that showcases the talent of students from all over the world, but also faculty and alumni from Russell Sage.

We gathered for an hour, packed with food and drinks and creatives eager to read and listen and learn from one another. Those in attendance were honored with the opportunity to hear some of them read and discuss their pieces that had been selected for the magazine. Copies had been at the ready for people when they walked in, allowing everyone to follow along as we flipped through the works.

It was incredibly refreshing to hear from artists from other countries, and really cool to see the variety of The Rev on display in the written and visual art forms.

The editors from the United Kingdom and Russell Sage were thanked immensely for their hard work and dedication to getting the magazine published in time, and we heard testimonials from a few people, including the New Visions high school editors and Peg Danner-

Frank, the lead teacher for the performing arts program at Questar III's New Visions. Danner-Frank gushed about the ease of working with the The Rev crew and the excitement of a future working together to continue opportunities such as this for the students they engage with. They discussed meeting new people and finding a sense of community with like-minded folks, and I truly don't think I can put it any better.

The launch of The Rev was bustling with excitement and encouragement, pride and joy from everyone in attendance, and it certainly made me antsy for next year's edition!
