When I smile and coo back and forth with a special adult, I am learning I can make people respond and that I am lovable.

When I play with my hands and feet, I am learning that those things are a part of me and I make them move.

When I turn an object over and over, I am learning that objects look different on the other side.

When I crawl into small nooks and crannies, I am learning where I fit and about shapes and sizes.

When I play peek-a-boo, I am learning that things and people exist even when I cannot see them.

When I fill and dump containers, I am learning that I can make exciting things happen.
