Raay Steben should hav been a private investigator. He has an uncanny way of meshing personal recollection and historical data into winning Trace This Place entries.

Steben's triumph this week was the description of a picture showing four women wearing aprons and standing in an old-fashioned shop. The photo was published June 13.

Steben's entry reads as follows:

"The Weber Building was built by Gottfried Weber during 1910 at 112-116 North York Street and was used as a bakery for many years a bakery for many years.

"During 1940, the bakery was being operated by sons Edward and Ernest and they had four local belles working for them as sales clerks and they are pictured in the Elmhurst Press Photo of June 13.

and Mart meant Martha); Mildred Freundt who later married Bud Shipp, a baker in this shop; and Gertrude Koop, who later became Mrs. R. Kienapple.

"This popular bakery had a sign on the wall to the left of the refrigerator for cream pasteries, which explained to the customers that a red star on their sales receipts entitled them to receive a free cream cake."

Special thanks to other entrant, William E. Reynolds.
