Aida Liman-Tinguiri is a dual-licensed attorney, admitted to practice in New York and Washington, D.C., with broad experience across Big Law, intellectual property, corporate transactions, and civil litigation. She has advised a wide range of clients—from individuals to multinational companies—and brings a strategic, solutions-oriented mindset to each engagement.

Aida holds degrees in biochemistry and immunology from the University of Toronto and the University of Oxford, and earned her J.D. from Harvard Law School, where she also taught copyright law as a student. Her interdisciplinary background and global perspective allow her to navigate complex legal and technical issues with precision and care.

She is committed to providing clear, effective counsel grounded in integrity, intellect, and empathy.

Representative Matters

- Represented a major pharmaceutical company in Hatch-Waxman litigation involving a treatment for a rare disease, supporting invalidity and non-infringement defenses through claim chart analysis, prior art research, and expert coordination during early discovery.
- Supported branded pharmaceutical company in Hatch-Waxman litigation involving a rare disease treatment, including claim chart development, prior art analysis, and coordination of expert materials in preparation for fact discovery.
- Represented a pharmaceutical company in a trade secret misappropriation case against former employees and a competing biotech company, involving confidential gene therapy manufacturing processes and coordination of technical and factual development in early litigation stages.
