5 Designer Kristin Rocke created a pure white backdrop for an interior enriched by hushed tones and intriguing textures emanating from art and rugs, furnishings and flowers. "White empowers soft colors; they have more strength on this canvas," says the principal of K. Rocke Design. She carefully orchestrated an assortment of muted blues for the light-filled room. "Don't repeat exact colors. That looks dated," Rocke advises. "Instead, choose a range of tones for a fresh, dynamic look."

6 "Just a few shots of color can make a big impact in a small room," says Gregg Hodson, principal of Gregg Hodson Interior Design. He began with a high-contrast canvas of dark window frames and white walls for this Salt Lake City home's guest room. Then, he used custom pillows, an upholstered chair and surprising lampshades to introduce warm orange and citrus tones to the space. "If the homeowners want to go a different direction with color, each of these is easy to change without breaking the bank," he explains.

7 "Use different shades and tones of a color to prevent it from looking overly intentional," advises designers Stephanie Holdaway and Chelsea Kasch of Gatehouse No. 1. Furniture & Design. In a Highland home, they isolated color to a few statement-making items to make a bold impact in this neutrally toned sitting room. ■

In the event planning industry, it's rare to find a team of designers who can do it all. Fortunately for Salt Lake City, the team at In The Event has your event covered, from the planning process to the last guest leaving the venue. Owners Robert & GayLyn LaSpina made this unique, all-inclusive approach to event planning a priority from day one, and it continues to set their team apart in the world of events.

Not only do they offer everything from event planning services to rentals and production technologies, their staff was hand-picked and curated as a team of experts in every service they offer. When you plan your event with their team, you'll receive 3-D renderings created by a certified graphic designer. Your event planner has years of experience producing events just like yours. Their onsite team will know everything about your event technology.

The best part about these services? They're all free. At In The Event, if you're renting anything from their inventory, you get a qualified event planner to help you navigate your planning process at no extra cost. "This is very important to us," says Robert. "We want to see clients enjoying a quality event, and offering our services for free helps us achieve that goal."

In The Event is currently celebrating their 10-year anniversary with a new rental facility in Wyoming, staff additions, and upgrades to innovative event technology. "Being at the forefront of trends in such a creative industry is key," says GayLyn. "Our clients know that when they book their events with us, they're getting the best service and rentals."
