Jordan & Maya

Before Jordan and Maya came to the Boys & Girls Club, their caregivers were growing concerned. They were getting into trouble, and it was clear they needed a space that could offer more than just supervision. They needed structure, support, and opportunities to grow.

When they started at the Club, the difference was immediate. Each day offered four program blocks, each with two to three engaging, age-appropriate choices, from art and sports to hands-on STEM projects. That variety gave them the freedom to explore their interests, the excitement of trying new things, and a sense of ownership over how they spent their time.

Maya jumped in with boundless energy, thriving in the fast-paced, choice-filled environment. Jordan's growth took a different path. At first, he struggled to manage his emotions, but with patient guidance from staff and the steady rhythm of Club life, he began to pause, think, and respond more calmly. By the end of the summer, he wasn't just managing his feelings. He was thriving.

Their caregivers noticed the change right away. They often praised the Club for how well the kids were doing, how much they enjoyed being there, and how they came home happily tired each night.

Theo & Rowan

Theo and Rowan first stepped into the Boys & Girls Club during the summer, withdrawn and hesitant. Referred by their school district, their teachers hoped the Club might offer the structure and support they struggled to find elsewhere. Both children arrived needing more guidance than most, and their quiet demeanor showed just how unsure they felt. From day one, they were met with welcoming faces, consistent routines, and gentle encouragement, small but meaningful steps toward helping them feel like they belonged.

In those early weeks, Theo lingered at the Lego table, building silently and keeping to himself until the presence of other members slowly helped him open up. Rowan hovered near the e-sports station, watching from the sidelines until staff gently nudged her to try playing. Bit by bit, the Club became their safe harbor, a place where they could explore new interests, take small risks, and begin forming friendships.

Their teachers soon noticed the shift: Theo and Rowan were more engaged, more confident, and more at ease. Our mission to help young people reach their full potential comes alive in moments like Theo's proud Lego tower, Rowan's victorious game, and the quiet confidence they now carry each day.
