Burial Vaults

Many people are under the common misconception that burial vaults are required by either local, state, or federal law. Burial vaults are NOT required by law.

Why then, do I have to have a burial vault???

Cemeteries are independent entities, and make their own rules and regulation regarding headstone requirements, foundation requirements, and burial vault requirements. They set their own prices for grave opening charges, and sometimes even charge vault companies a road tax to enter their cemetery.

Most cemeteries require the use of a vault, a concrete box placed in the grave to house the casket. The cemetery doesn't really care if your casket is protected, they require the burial vault to keep the ground from sinking. In many older cemeteries, you may have seen graves sinking down, or headstones tilting. This happens when there is no burial vault.

TRIGARD LINED BURIAL VAULTS

In addition to the extreme pressure placed on a vault from the simple weight of the soil, the cemetery equipment, such as a backhoe running over the grave increases the strong downward force applied to the burial vaults.

Add to that the pressure exerted when adjacent graves are being opened. An incredible amount of force is placed on the ground, and directed to the burial vaults.

The cemetery that you have selected DOES require the use of a burial vault. You select the vault today, and we will place the order with the vault company, and they will bring it to the cemetery and set the vault in place. The vault company will also seal the vault, either in the grave or above ground.
