Job title: Senior Lecturer in Policing

A little bit about me: After completing my Master's degree at University of Leicester, I decided to enter the police force as a PC. I absolutely loved the role, and never thought I would leave. That was until a role at a local university came up which offered to allow me to complete my PhD as well. I decided to leave the police and enter academia. I am now completing a PhD on the mental health and wellbeing, and social identity, of police officers. Throughout my career, I have enjoyed supporting individuals to reach their potential. I am now a Senior Lecturer at BNU.

A snapshot of my career: Attended university 2014 – 2017 to complete undergraduate and Master's degree in criminology. Whilst doing my Master's degree, I joined Leicestershire Police as a Special Constable. I then joined as a fulltime PC in 2018 until 2021 when I went back to being a Special Constable again as I joined Cumbria University as a lecturer in Policing. I then joined BNU in 2022 as a Senior Lecturer in Policing, and am the programme lead for apprenticeships and sit on the Senior Leadership Team.

I like to motivate others by: actively listening to what it is they're trying to achieve, and breaking down goal setting into meaningful chunks.

A personal value I stand by is: a problem shared is a problem halved.

Others would say my best leadership quality is: checking the welfare of my team.

My main strengths, skills and qualities that would benefit a mentee are: problem solving and working as a team to overcome challenges in a collaborative manner.

My interests outside of work include: seeing friends, going to the football, going out for dinner, spa days, spending time with my dog!
