

School is out for SUMMER!

School is wrapping up for summer, but the next school year will be here before we know it. That means purchasing new wardrobes, hunting for school supplies, or aligning your budget for college planning. New and returning college students will likely open their first banking relationship during these months, while recent college graduates begin a career and focus on paying back school loans, credit cards and other obligations accrued before they started working.

WEBINAR OPPORTUNITIES

Just because school is out of session doesn't mean the education has to stop! Check out these relevant webinar topics:

- Education planning: Reviews various options available to help you plan and save for educational expenses.
- Raising financially savvy children: Learn helpful tips to teach your child about earning, saving, spending, giving, and investing to set them up for long-term success with managing money.

College Planning Hub

Our College Planning hub on bankofamerica.com provides clients access to Merrill Edge and Bank of America articles, calculators and tools about the phases of college planning.

Quick Tip from Better Money Habits

If you have a future college student, consider asking relatives to contribute to a 529 plan instead of buying birthday or holiday gifts!
