Dear friends,

Over the years, there have been a number of things that our parish has gotten very good at doing. One of those things is fixing a delicious fried chicken dinner, with dumpings, dressings and all the other trimmings. Last week we did it again. We sold over 2800 tickets for our chicken dinner. While we sold that many tickets, we have found over the years that about 10% of the people who buy tickets, don't come to pick up a dinner. As it was, people came through our drive thru to pick up over 2500 dinners. We also delivered dinners to Leisure Living, The House of Bread and Peace, Ozanam Family Shelter and the United Caring Shelter. When all was said and done, workers were able to take remaining food home with them. As has been our custom, those doing so made donations of $755 to our Haiti Food Fund—a win-win for sure.

All of you who helped prepare the food and worked to deliver it through our drive thru did a really great job. More than once, people commented to me about what a amazing operation it was. I am very grateful to the leadership tht Chip & Megan Altstadt and Britt & Patrick Fehrenbacher provided. For the last seven years they have led this parish effort. As one person said, "they were great leaders because they made it so easy for us to do our jobs," I would have loved for them to continue in this leadership role, but, alas, that is not possible.

Now the great thing is that is they have trained some new leaders, Kelly & Jordan Wilkinson and Jenna & Jordan Phelps. If their efforts last week were any indication, the future leadership of our social is in good hands.

Special thanks to Stu Gibbs and the Men's Club for providing the drinks, burgers, hot dogs and chips for our after social party. It was a great way to end the day.

Our preliminary total income for the day was $114,399 with $42,185 coming from our dinners and $72,214 coming from our raffle. We still have a few bills to pay so we won't have our final figures until then. We will have a complete report in the September issue of The Carpenter.

It looks like our computer hackers have been at it again. I know that a number of you received an email that purportedly came from me inviting you to some event. It was a scam. This scam seems to go around every few months, using an email from one of the priests in our diocese as the "bait" to get people to download their stuff to your computer. Sad to say, this seems to be part of living with the technology we have.

I will tell you what I have told you in the past—if you get something that supposedly comes from me and it looks suspicious, delete it. A number of you also checked with me to ask if I had sent an email. That's a good thing to do as well.

Leaning into the journey of life,

Fr. Gene Schroeder

ALLEY VIOLINIST

If you were an alley violinist
and they threw you money
from three windows
and the first note contained
a nickel and said:
when you play,
we dance and sing,
signed: a very poor family
and the second one contained
a dime and said:
I like your playing very much,
signed: a sick old lady
and the last one contained
a dollar and said: beat it,
would you:
stand there and play?
beat it? walk away
playing your fiddle?

This week we continue reading Pope Leo's letter
(encyclical) Magnifica Humanitas:
On the protection of the human person
in the age of artificial intelligence

In Octogesima Adveniens, written on the occasion of the eightieth anniversary of Rerum Novarum, Paul VI applied this perspective to postindustrial society, marked by urbanization, new forms of poverty and rapid cultural changes that called into question the future of individuals and communities. Paul VI believed that although the Gospel was proclaimed, written and lived out in a historical and cultural context very different from our own, its message was not "outdated." Instead, it offers a vision of the human person, relationships, authority and the common good that is still capable of guiding economic, political and cultural choices today. In other words, the Gospel remains relevant because it provides the criteria for recognizing what humanizes or dehumanizes and what liberates or oppresses in ever-changing situations.

For the Social Doctrine of the Church, Paul VI's most demanding legacy is precisely this: as long as there are people in the world who are excluded from the development befitting human dignity, the Christian community cannot be content with a theoretical proclamation of peace. Rather, beginning where people are marginalized, it must allow the Gospel to pass judgment on those economic and political structures which -- as John Paul II would later remind us -- can become veritable "structures of sin." [34] As a result, no person or people will be treated as expendable in the processes of development.

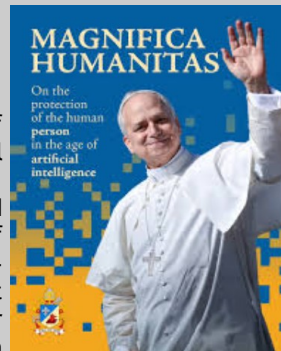

THE RECENT MAGESTERIUM

The rich social teaching of John Paul II lies at the crossroads of the crisis of the great ideological systems of the twentieth century and the onset of economic globalization. His Encyclical Laborem Exercens, opened up a new avenue for reflection on work. It presents fair wages as the concrete means of verifying the justness of the entire socioeconomic system because they reveal whether the worker is treated as a person or merely as a cost of production. Work is not considered simply as a problem to be dealt with or a means of generating income, but a fundamental good for the person, a principle of economic activity and the key to the entire societal question. Through work, human beings bring their freedom, creativity and capacity for cooperation into play, contributing to the cultural and moral elevation of society. In light of this, the various kinds of job insecurity, fragmented career paths and automation must not be evaluated solely in terms of efficiency, but in relation to the dignity of the worker, the right to sufficient remuneration and the genuine possibility of participating in society.

With his Encyclical Sollicitudo Rei Socialis, marking the twentieth anniversary of Populorum Progressio, John Paul II reexamined the scourge of underdevelopment. He acknowledged the failure of numerous attempts to accelerate the economic development of poor peoples and to assist them in the process of industrialization, noting the persistent and indeed widening gap between the world's North and South. He also denounced the economic, financial and commercial mechanisms that, managed by the strongest economies, structurally favor their own interests while stifling weaker economies, and he asked that they be subjected to serious ethical, not just technical, scrutiny. In this context, solidarity was understood as a concrete, shared responsibility among individuals, peoples and nations -- a form of social friendship or political charity oriented toward the "civilization of love" proposed by Paul VI.

The Encyclical Centesimus Annus offered a reflection on the collapse of the Soviet system and the rise of democracy and the market economy. John Paul II reiterated Pius XII's message that the Church values democracy insofar as it guarantees the effective participation of citizens, enables them to elect and peacefully replace their leaders and prevents power from being monopolized by small elite groups motivated by particular or ideological interests. Likewise, the Church recognizes the positive potential of the market and private initiative only if they remain subordinate to the moral law and are guided by the principle of solidarity, without sacrificing the most vulnerable to the rationale of profit. This adds a particularly relevant legacy to the Social Doctrine of the Church. The affirmation of the link between the dignity of work, solidarity among peoples, a critical assessment of democracy and the market economy continues to provide criteria for evaluating new forms of exploitation, exclusion and crises in political representation.
