UKMHA Policy Statement

Accreditation and Membership

Stantone Mechanical Handling Limited (SMHL) is committed to maintaining the highest standards of safety, professionalism and technical competence required of a fully accredited UK Material Handling Association (UKMHA) member. As one of Northamptonshire's longest-established independent materials handling providers, we recognise the importance of operating to industry-led best practice and maintaining full compliance across all areas of our business.

The UKMHA accreditation and re-accreditation process provides an independent, structured assessment of our organisation. It evaluates our performance in key areas including health and safety, engineering standards, environmental responsibility, customer service, risk management and operational integrity. Achieving and maintaining accreditation confirms that SMHL continues to meet the rigorous expectations set by the UK's leading authority on material handling.

Accreditation and membership form an important part of our continuous improvement programme. It allows us to step back, review our systems objectively and identify opportunities to strengthen our processes even further. For our customers, it provides confidence that SMHL operates to the highest standards of traceability, accountability and technical competence, ensuring there is no weak link in the supply chain

As a UKMHA-accredited company, SMHL commits to:

- Upholding the UKMHA Code of Practice and maintaining the highest levels of integrity and professionalism.
- Ensuring all engineers and technical staff are trained, competent and authorised for the work they undertake.
- Carrying out all servicing, repairs and Thorough Examinations in accordance with LOLER, PUWER and recognised industry standards.
- Maintaining robust health and safety systems, safe working practices and effective risk management.
- Operating transparently, ethically and in the best interests of our customers.
- Reviewing our performance regularly and driving continual improvement across all areas of the business
