Thompson earns distinguished MSCP credentials

ADA – Elizabeth Thompson, PA-C, MSCP, of The Women’s Clinic, has recently earned the status of Menopause Society Certified Practitioner. She is now one of only five physician assistants across Oklahoma to hold this title.

“The MSCP credentials mean that I have met the rigorous standards set by the Menopause Society, including passing a comprehensive board examination,” said Thompson. “I’m recognized as a specialist in perimenopausal and menopausal health care. For my patients, this means having a partner in their care who is uniquely equipped with the most current, expert guidance to support them through every stage of this transition and beyond.”

The Ohio-based Menopause Society is a national non-profit organization with the mission of empowering healthcare professionals and providing them with the tools and resources they need to improve the health of women throughout the menopause process.

“This specialized training allows me to bring a unique level of expertise to our community, ensuring women receive the highest standard of care right here at home,” Thompson said. “I chose to pursue MSCP credentials out of a deep commitment to the women in our community. I believe every woman deserves access to quality, evidence-based care through midlife and beyond. My goal is to be a provider women can trust – a provider who has extensively studied the complexities of women’s health and is fully qualified to partner with them in making the best decisions for their lifelong well-being.”
