

DAVID THOMAS STONE

LEGEND OF THE JERAWOC

Predator of Man

A DAVID THOMAS STONE STORY

This is the story of an ancient people of the Great Blue Ice Wall, who followed great herds of migrating animals across the last Bering land bridge between Asia and North America 15,000 years ago. It recounts the struggle of man against the natural predator of man, and of a hidden legend that local natives helped keep secret for centuries for fear of death to anyone who spoke of it.

Their stories start in ancient times, and they are still here. You will learn why we all have our natural fear of the dark and of an ancient survival instinct imbedded in our DNA. Because at one time not very long ago, there was something in the dark.

First in a series of stories about the people of the Great Blue Ice Wall, the ancient Nezbeth, and the Jerawoc.
