Story of the Keno Sternwheeler

Visit the S.S. Keno on Front Street.
A Parks Canada attraction.

From the late 1800's to the early 1900's, approximately 250 sternwheelers plied the Yukon River between Whitehorse and Dawson City. Some headed out to the Bering Sea and beyond. They hauled freight, passengers and mining ore in a wilderness where there were no roads.

The Keno Sternwheeler is 130 feet long and was built in 1922 in Whitehorse to transport silver, lead and zinc ore from the mines in Mayo to Stewart City. The ore was stockpiled on the bank of the river at Mayo landing all winter awaiting the arrival of the SS Keno in mid-May. In 1938, over 9,000 tons of ore were carried by the Keno, every sack of it manhandled.

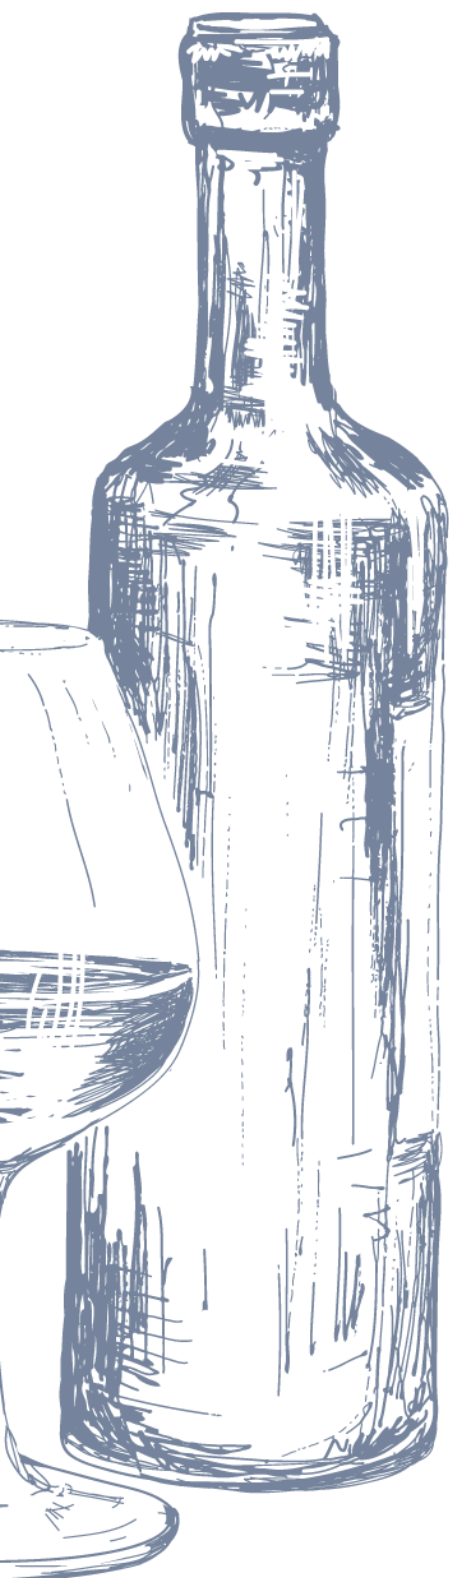

In 1960, the Keno was moved to her present berth, on the Dawson waterfront beside the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. Her shallow draught and low super structure made transfer easier.

On her last trip to Dawson, she carried 21 passengers, mostly newspaper correspondents and cameramen. The old River Steamer has been preserved to commemorate an era now passed forever.
